INTRODUCTION.

To discover truth is the best happiness of an individual; and to communicate it is the greatest blessing he can bestow upon society. Moral and religious truth can only be obtained from the right interpretation of Scripture: and the most effectual means of eliciting that right interpretation must be, to ascertain its primary or historical meaning. The Books of Revelation were given to the world at various times, and upon different occasions. Each book was written for some one especial cause. The all-wise providence of God has not imparted his will, as human legislators are compelled to do, in abstract precepts, arbitrary institutions, or metaphysical distinctions. His Revelation is so constructed, that it is interwoven with the history of the world. It is a collection of facts and inferences—of narratives and doctrines. To understand the latter, we must acquaint ourselves with the former: and then only shall we perceive that it is equally adapted to all ages and nations, so long as human nature remains the same; and so long as hope and fear, and joy and sorrow, and evil and good, and sin and holiness, characterize mankind.

The most general cause of religious error is the neglect of this mode of viewing Scripture. The Old and New Testaments, not only in the present day, but in former ages, have been for the most part considered as large reservoirs of texts, or as well-stored magazines of miscellaneous theological aphorisms; from which every speculative theorist, and every inventor of an hypothesis, may discover some plausible arguments to defend his peculiar opinion. No matter how absurd his reasoning; no matter how inconsistent his notions may be with the analogy of faith, with the testimony of antiquity, or with the context from which a passage is forcibly torn away. His own interpretation shall be to him as the Spirit of God. The light is kindled from within; and though its beams are not borrowed from learning, nor sense, nor sobriety, fancy shall supply the place of an acquaintance with the original tongue, and of the decisions of the commentator, till the Scripture speaks the language of Babel to its Babylonish consulters.

Seeing the absurdity and unreasonableness of this perversion of Scripture, the Romanist has proceeded to an opposite extreme. He rejects the oracles of God as his only religious guide, and unites with them the traditions of men to render them useless. He substitutes the priest for the Deity—the leaves of the sibyl, for the pages of truth—the decisions of the ages of darkness, for the well-considered interpretations of the studious and the learned. Avoiding one class of errors, he thus becomes the advocate of others, more dangerous, and more indefensible. By closing the Scriptures to the people, the very possibility of discovering truth is done away. Error, invention, and imposture have at length been combined into one unscriptural system, where religion and liberty are alike sacrificed at the shrine of a predicted apostacy from the spirit and power of Christianity. That superstition must indeed be a curse to mankind, which is so bitterly and so sternly condemned in the Scriptures of the dispensation of mercy and love ; and which is represented also as falling into ruin, amidst the curses or the joy of the nations.

Though the evils which have been brought upon the world by the frequent misinterpretation of the Scriptures, where they are, as they ought to be, freely perused, be infinitely less than those which have been occasioned by prohibiting their use ; their value, as our infallible guides, will become more evident, if we prevent, in any instance, the misapprehension of their sacred contents. This task is the more especial duty of the Clergy, as their authorized interpreters. Every attempt, therefore, whether of a partial or of a general nature, to illustrate the Inspired Volume, and to enable the people to avoid the two extremes to which I have alluded, ought to be considered as submitted to the approbation of the Christian ministry. Their sanction must decide whether the labors of the theological student are worthy of the favorable reception of their people. Nothing, indeed, which is stamped with the general disapproval of the Protestant Clergy can deserve the public favor. They are too numerous to be bribed ; too learned to decide erroneously ; too wisely liberal to be partial or unjust. Having no false creed to support, no unworthy objects to conceal, no inferior ends to serve, they approve or condemn, from their abundance of knowledge, and the soundest principles of reasoning. Their decisions are neither arbitrary, nor capricious. The public, whom they influence, may not always receive its first bias from their opinions ; but its ultimate acquiescence is uniformly founded upon a conviction, that the reasonings which convince their teachers are satisfactory in their principles and conclusions. The Romanist priesthood may command the submission of its flocks to the arbitrary decrees of the councils of an infallible Church—the Protestant priesthood must persuade by argument and learning, or it possesses neither influence nor authority.

Within the last few years the Sacred Volume, under the blessing of Divine Providence, has not only been circulated in a great number of languages, among the most remote nations ; but it has also been distributed to an indefinite extent in our native country. The spirit of attachment to the Inspired Records has even sometimes represented the Sacred Scriptures as the only means of grace. While the Bible alone is justly called the religion of Protestants, it has not been sufficiently considered, that the instructions of a Christian priesthood are no less the means of grace to the Churches of God. The Bible is the map which directs, the Christian Minister must explain its directions : and wherever the Bible is read, a better interpreter of its infinite variety of blessings is generally required than the devotion, the zeal, the fancy, or the good intentions, of the reader. Much of its invaluable contents may be understood without any other guide than the desire of the reader to become holy in the presence of God : but as the perversion of the Scriptures is the source of all error, and therefore of much crime, the interpreter is required to prevent that perversion. All sects, all parties, all Churches are united in asserting this truth. From the Church which acknowledges an infallible head upon earth, to the Society which sits in silent homage to the Deity, waiting the descent of a divine influence from above upon its male or female instructors—all confess the necessity of some guide to truth and heaven, besides the perusal of the uncommented text of Scripture. To the teachers, therefore, as well as the disciples of Christianity, I am anxious to submit the attempt to fix the primary meaning of every passage in the Bible, as the best foundation of correct teaching—as the surest preventive of error—the guide to all secondary interpretations—and the solid basis of that undoubted truth which is contained in the Scriptures alone.

As the contents of the Old Testament are miscellaneously arranged, and the respective author of each book was left to his own language and his own judgment in the disposition of his writings; we might naturally have expected that the same plan would be adopted also by the writers of the New Testament. The Spirit of God, which so influenced their minds for the common benefit of mankind, that they should relate only truth to the world, did not instruct them in the rounding of periods, or the studied arts of composition: neither were they directed to observe one order of the several events, which each has related in his inspired narrative. One consequence of the apparent contradictions which have originated in this source has been highly beneficial to the Christian Church—greater attention to the Sacred Volume has been induced; and every difficulty which has been proposed by such objectors as Evanson, Priestley, Middleton, and others, to the consistency and veracity of the Evangelists, has been amply refuted. There are no real contradictions in Scripture. The scope and design of each writer require only to be known, and then the causes of their apparent discrepancies, of the variety of their phrases, of their omissions, their additions, and selections of particular events, will be fully understood and appreciated; and the value of the Inspired Books will be made to appear yet more and more inestimable. Another consequence, however, has been more painful. Christianity is the enemy of vice, in all its forms, all its plausibilities, all its self-deception, apologies, and motives. The least allowed indulgence of evil is incompatible with the demands of this pure and holy religion. Anxious to reconcile a life of negligence of God with adherence to Christianity, the careless, the irreligious, the presumptuous, the self-opinionated, or the indifferent, look for objections to the truth of Scripture; and reject the Law to which they refuse obedience. Some of the objections proposed by the enemies of Christianity have been drawn from the apparent difficulties suggested by the various order of their narratives, adopted by the writers of the New Testament: and the evident advantage of removing these objections, and reconciling the accounts of the Evangelists, has induced many learned or inquiring men, in the earlier as well as in the later ages of Christianity, to compile and submit to the world various Harmonies, which have been formed on different plans, or hypotheses. An eminent critic^a has divided these into two classes: “Harmonies, of which the authors have taken it for granted that all the Evangelists have written in chronological order; and Harmonies, of which the authors have admitted that in one or more of the four Gospels chronological order has been more or less neglected.” To these might have been added a third, in which the Harmonizers have supposed that the chronology has been neglected by all the four Evangelists. The Harmonists who have adopted some one of these plans are very numerous. I refer the reader to the catalogues of Walchius^b, Michaelis^c, Pilkington^d, Horne^e, Chemnitius^f, and Cave^g, for a more ample account than it may be thought advisable to give in this Introduction. They ought not, however, to be passed by without some notice.

The Canon of the New Testament was closed by the Author of the Apocalypse. After his death, the Christian Churches admitted no addition to the Inspired Volume. Each book, as it had been successively given to the Churches, was carefully verified, and cautiously received. They were at first addressed to some one particular class of men, or were composed for one express purpose; and, before their general utility was acknowledged, they were received by the persons to whom they were addressed, in the sense for which they were composed by their respective authors. Thus the Gospel of St. Matthew, as Dr. Townson and others have satisfactorily shown, was compiled at a very early period after the ascension of our Lord, for the use of the Jewish converts. The Gospel of St. Mark was probably composed for the use of the converted Proselytes of the Gate; and St. Luke's Gospel was written for the more general use of the Gentile converts, who were united into churches by St. Paul. The Gospel of St. John was written at the request of the Church at Ephesus, as a supplement to the rest; with more especial reference to those heresies of his age, which impugned the doctrine of the Divinity of Christ. Many years, we may justly conclude, would have elapsed before these Gospels were collected into one volume; and many more would elapse before the attention of the primitive Churches, which received them with so much veneration, would be directed to their apparent discrepancies. For this veneration was not slightly founded; it originated from the universal knowledge which prevailed among all the Churches, that the authors of these books, and of the other books which they esteemed sacred, were possessed of the power of working miracles, to demonstrate the truth of their narration. The general evidence deducible from the testimony of the eyewitnesses of the wonderful actions of our Lord, and from the testimony of the hearers of his gracious teaching, was not sufficient. The relators of his actions could appeal to their own supernatural gifts, and afford undeniable proofs of their veracity, and of their more than human knowledge. St. Matthew, as one of the twelve, partook of the miraculous powers which were given to each. St. Peter may be considered as the real author of St. Mark's Gospel; and St. Paul, of the Gospel attributed to St. Luke. St. John also was of the twelve. Invested with the apostolic office, and acting with the plenary powers with which their Divine Master had honored them, we may justly conclude that none of their early converts, either of the Jews, the Proselytes, or the Gentiles, would have considered the seeming difficulties of their narratives. The objects for which both the Gospels and the Epistles were written would have been well understood, and further explanation was unnecessary: and no Harmony of the Gospels would have been either desired or appreciated in the apostolic age.

When the miraculous powers of the apostles, however, had ceased with their lives, and the generation which had witnessed these miracles had passed away, it might naturally have been expected that some attention would be paid to this subject, and some efforts made to reconcile the apparent varieties in the accounts of the Evangelists. About eighty years after the death of St. John and the closing of the Canon of the New Testament, Tatian, a Syrian by descent, a Mesopotamian by birth, a sophist by profession, before his conversion to Christianity, and becoming a pupil of Justin Martyr, compiled the first Harmony of the Gospels. The fragments which remain, and have been attributed to Tatian, are now generally imputed to Ammonius. Clemens^h quotes Tatian as the first harmonizer. He divided his Harmony into eighty-one chapters; omitted the genealogies which prove Christ to be descended from David (the heresy of that age being to exalt, rather than to depress, the dignity of our Lord), and reduced all the Passovers to one, on the supposition that our Saviour's ministry lasted only one year. Epiphanius tells usⁱ, that where Eusebius accuses the Ebionites of using only the Gospel according to the Hebrews, he means that they used the Harmony of Tatian. Theodoret tells us, that he found two hundred copies of Tatian's Harmony, which were highly prized: but because the genealogies and descent of Christ from David were omitted, he gave the four Gospels in their place. An additional evidence, that the translations of Victor of Capua, and of Lascinius are spurious^k, may be derived from the fact, that they retain the genealogy which Tatian is said to have rejected.

Pilkington gives a specimen, in his notes, of the confused order of the Harmony of Tatian, who does not, indeed, appear to have been a man of much judgment. The account which Cave has given of his philosophical opinions sufficiently convinces us, that no dependence can be placed on his decision. I add the extract, as even Pilkington's work is rare^l. Tatian in general kept close to the order of St. Matthew, in which he has been followed by the greater number of those harmonizers who prefer being guided by the authority of one Evangelist, rather than equally to transpose the four. He sometimes, however, recedes from it without any apparent necessity or reason. "Several things," says Pilkington, "which ought evidently to be connected, are disjoined; others are improperly united. The order of all the Gospels is arbitrarily transposed, and the times and seasons cannot be distinguished^m."

Ammonius, a Platonic philosopher of Alexandria, published a work, in the third century, which bears a more proper title than the former; being only called Evangeliorum Narratio. He so exactly follows the method of Tatian, that there Pilkington's Notes, p. 30.

^m Jerome mentions Theophilus, bishop of Antioch, as the first harmonist. The Treatise on the Gospels, ascribed to him, allegorizes, instead of harmonizes, the Sacred Volume. Preface, p. x is little doubt he has made an abridgment only of that work. About the year 330, Juvenus, a Spaniard, wrote the Evangelical History in heroic verse. "He recedes," says Pilkington, "very little from the method observed by Tatian; only he keeps more closely to the present order of St. Matthew's Gospel, which he seems to have made his guide. In this he is followed by St. Augustine, who about the year 400, wrote his treatise De Concordia Evangelistarum."

Comestor, a Frenchman, about 1180, wrote his Historia Evangelica, which, in method, differs very little from that of Tatian and Ammonius.

Guido de Perpiniano published his Concordia Evangelica about 1330. He, in a great measure, follows St. Augustine, adhering to the present order of St. Matthew's Gospel: and he was of opinion, that, wherever any relation of facts or doctrines appears similar, in any of the Gospels, those passages ought to be connected, as being accounts of the same fact or discourse, though given in a different manner. For example: several doctrines were delivered by our Saviour, at different times, and on different occasions, correspondent to those contained in the Sermon on the Mount; wherever he met with any doctrines similar to these, in any part of St. Mark's or St. Luke's Gospel, he thus transposed them so as to connect them with St. Matthew.

It must appear absurd to every reader, to suppose St. Mark's and St. Luke's Gospels to be such confused rhapsodies as they are here represented. The same method was likewise continued by Ludolphus, a German, who wrote his Vita Christi about the same time with Guido; and John Gerson, who published his Monotessaron about the year 1420.

About the year 1537, Osiander, a Protestant minister of Germany, published his Annotationes in Evangelicam Harmoniam. He makes no alteration of the present order of any of the Gospels; but wherever similar facts or doctrines are placed variously, he imagines they ought to be distinctly considered. But, if the arbitrary method of transposing all the Gospels led the first Harmonists to connect passages which they ought not, the method which Osiander determined to pursue obliged him to suppose some passages to be accounts of different facts; which, upon any impartial examination into the several circumstances related, must appear to be the same: that is, two sermons are supposed to have been preached upon the Mount ; one related by St. Matthew and the other by St. Luke. Two centurions' servants are supposed to have been healed—two women are supposed to have been healed of an issue of blood—two damsels to have been raised from the dead—and two tempests to have been stilled upon the sea.

The Harmony of Corn. Jansenius, bishop of Ghent, was published about 1550. He follows the confused method of the first Harmonists : and Calvin, whose Harmonia ex tribus Evangelistis appeared in 1555, hath very nearly followed the steps of Perpinian. He omits St. John's Gospel in his Harmony, as having very little connexion with the others ; though this Gospel is one of the principal guides to a Harmonist, as it mentions the several Passovers, and distinguishes the times by notations omitted by the other Evangelists.

In opposition to Calvin, Carolus Molinaeus, a celebrated French lawyer, published an Evangeliorum Unio, in 1565. He appears to have taken but little pains in this cause : for he so nearly copies after Osiander, that he evidently seems rather to defend his opinion than to advance a new one.

There was a Harmony published with the Rhemish Testament, in 1582, in the confused method of the first Harmonists : which was also followed by Beaux-Ami, whose Harmony and Annotations were first printed in 1583.

Gerard Mercator, the great geographer, published a Harmony in 1590, wherein he keeps steadily to the present order of St. Matthew, transposing the others ; but with more caution than Perpinian.

The Harmony of Martin Chemnitius, who died in 1586, was revised by Lyser, and afterwards by John Gerhard, who entirely approved of his plan. Chemnitius too much followed the method of the first Harmonists : though he saw and reformed several of their errors, and sometimes recedes from the present order of all the first three Gospels. Perkins published at Cambridge, in 1597, an abstract from Chemnitius, who, indeed, was chiefly followed by all Harmonists, with very little variation, for half a century. "Among these," says Pilkington, "I must particularly mention Sebastian Barradius, who was called, for his great zeal, knowledge, and industry, the Apostle of Portugal. Though Barradius followed nearly the same method with Chemnitius, he cannot well be supposed to have copied after him, as he appears to have been engaged in this work before that was published ; and he deserves our thanks, for collecting the various opinions of all the ancient Fathers, upon every particular mentioned in the Gospels, with great care and fidelity, which renders his work a valuable commentary."

Thomas Cartwright, who published his Harmony about 1630, makes the present order of St. Mark his rule for method, but takes great liberties in the transposition of St. Matthew and St. Luke.

In 1654 was published the second part of the Annals of Archbishop Usher, in which is comprised a Harmony of the Gospels, by Dr. John Richardson, bishop of Ardagh. The Bishop supposes that St. Matthew hath alone neglected the order of time, which is regularly and constantly observed by the other three Evangelists. St. John, indeed, takes so little notice of what is mentioned by the others, and so plainly appears to have followed the proper series of history, that the freest pens have rarely taken occasion to transpose his order : Tatian, Comestor, Ludolphus, and Mann, place chap. vi. before chap. v. The value of Dr. Richardson's work has been acknowledged by Le Clerc, 1701, Whiston, 1702, Bedford, 1730, &c. and the foreigners, Du Pin and Butini ; who, though they differ from Bishop Richardson, and among themselves in many particulars, yet all agree to follow the general method here mentioned.

Dr. Lightfoot published part of his Harmony in 1644, and the whole in 1654. He adheres to the present order of St. Mark and St. Luke, which he never transposes except in this instance :—

Sect.	St. Matthew	St. Mark	St. Luke
39	viii. 23.—ix. 2.	iv. 36.—v. 22.	viii. 22—41.
41	ix. 18—27.	v. 22.	viii. 41.

The Harmonia Evangelica of Monsieur Toinard, published in 1707, has deservedly met with very general approbation ; for he not only pursued the true method in general, but he was possessed of great learning and judgment ; and he applied himself, with great care and diligence, to settle the several circumstances mentioned by the different Evangelists. In this laborious work every sentence, and even every word, is harmonized.

When I remembered that the valuable Diatessaron of Professor White, and the Harmonies of Newcome, Doddridge, Pilkington, Michaelis, and others, must be added to this list, I confess I contemplated the proposed completion of the Arrangement of the Scriptures with some dismay. To peruse all these works, even if they could be procured, was impossible—to reject them all would be an act of absurd presumption. The most patient labor can add but little to the good which has been already effected, and the researches of our predecessors must be the only solid foundation of every attempt to be useful.

The four Gospels having been written, as I have represented, for the use of some particular class of persons, and on various occasions in which they were interested, may be considered as letters. Each was penned on the plan of an Epistle, containing a narrative. In letter-writing, digressions, interruptions, sudden desertions and resumptions of the subject, frequently occur. If I had received four letters from a distant country, each of which contained an account of the life and death of a kind friend—each informing me of some event, or circumstance, which the other had omitted—each preserving the same principal circumstances, but varying in the order of the minuter events—I should endeavour to ascertain the probable order of the events related, by first selecting those which were common to all ; and then by arranging, as probably consecutive, those which were made to follow each other, in any two of the letters. For the right placing of the events which might appear unconnected, certain rules must be laid down, as they would be suggested by the plan of the writer, the nature of his style, the notation of time and place, and the latitude to be assigned to the various particles which denote nearness, or remoteness, or connexion. It would be necessary to observe, whether my correspondents were more intent on representing the substance of what is spoken, than the words of the speaker ; or whether they neglected accurate order in the detail of particular incidents, though they pursued a good general method ; whether detached and distant events are sometimes joined together on account of a sameness in the scene, the person, the cause, or the consequences—whether, in such concise histories as are contained in letters, transitions were not often made from one fact to another, without any intimation that important matters intervened. By thus entering into the manner of my various correspondents, I should more effectually make them their own harmonists.

The same rules, which might be thus applied to human compositions, are applicable to the Gospels; the superior veneration, which is due to the latter as inspired compositions, rendering greater care and attention necessary, than if they had been writings of less moment. Chemnitius has laid down several rules in his Prolegomena, which had evidently been attended to by Pilkington, Newcome, and Doddridge. Though Chemnitius had rendered his work comparatively useless to me as a guide, on account of his generally preferring the order of St. Matthew; his rules are so valuable, that I shall add some further notice of them, to enable the reader to judge more correctly of the propriety of the order which I have adopted in the following work.

It might have been supposed, that St. Luke was the proper guide to be followed, on account of the expression he has used in his preface. This has been considered in its place. Chemnitius' remark is just—“καθεξῆς non præcise exactum ordinem in omnibus; sed quod altius ordiri, et historiam ab initio repetere, ac deinceps continuâ narratione distincte, et distribute, quasi per gradus, reliqua velit addere.” Rejecting the notion of Osiander (and with him of Macknight, and all other harmonists who have followed the same plan), that each Evangelist wrote in their exact order the circumstances they have related, Chemnitius proceeds, as if the Gospels had been written on the plan of letters, to notice those facts which must be the resting places of the harmonizers. We are to ascertain the number of Passovers—the greater events between each—the principal journeyings of our Lord, and how he was at certain towns or places at certain times. His birth, baptism, death, resurrection, and ascension, must of course begin and end every Harmony.

The Evangelists, we may presume, generally relate things in their order; unless they are reminded of other events, which appear to be suggested by the mention of a name, or an event. Thus St. Matthew unites the calling and mission of the twelve, though the latter was long after the former. St. Luke inserts the story of the death of the Baptist long before it took place; being reminded of it by the event he had related. Mark unites also the captivity and death of John.

Newcome has given many additional instances to those collected by Chemnitius, to show that many general notices of time do not always imply an immediate succession of events; such as “at that time”—“in those days”—περιπατῶν δὲ—ιδὼν δὲ—ἐγένετο δὲ—καὶ ἐλθὼν—“on one of those days,” as they were coming into Capernaum, &c.

Those notes of time, however, are to be particularly observed which appear to imply continuance, or are more definite—“When he came down from the mountain he went,” &c. “When he had finished these words”—“In that hour”—“On the third day”—“On the eighth day.”

Observe where the omission of events seems to be implied, as in John v. 1.; vi. 1.; and vii. 1. The expressions μετὰ ταῦτα, and ιδού, καὶ τότε,* are thus used.

When all the Evangelists agree in the order of certain events, their united consent ought not to be disturbed.

When two Evangelists agree in any particular order, and a third differs, the two are to be preferred to the third; unless very evident reasons appear to the contrary.

When two Evangelists relate the same fact, and place different facts after it, observe the stricter notation of time in one than the other.

* See the notes to the passages in which these expressions occur.

[* “After these things,”—“behold,”—“and then.”—ED.]

Chemnitius here refers to the instances that, after the healing of the centurion's servant, St. Matthew relates the healing of St. Peter's mother-in-law. St. Luke relates the raising of the widow's son, and uses the particle which denotes the stricter notation of time; while St. Matthew only implies that it was about that time. St. Mark adds a note, that this healing of St. Peter's mother-in-law was effected when that apostle was called.

When the order of events after a fact is different, inquire whether the alteration is by anticipation or recapitulation, and the circumstances in which the history is related.

When in the context of some one Evangelist one history follows another, and it is certain that the following is the last, consider whether any event is to be inserted—for instance; between the purification and return to Nazareth, insert the slaughter of the infants, and the flight into Egypt.

When one Evangelist relates events in certain order, and an event is recorded among them, which is omitted by the other Evangelists when relating the same events, the order of the one may be followed.

But if that one event may, by any notes of time, be transposed, the order is not a sufficient argument against its being displaced.

Sometimes events, or discourses, are related, which are put together because they are told of the same person; not because they are consecutive, but that the history of the person may be put together, as the mission of the apostles, the story of the Baptist, &c.

When similar events are related we may conclude them to be the same, if the minuter circumstances agree; such as time, place, occasion, person, object.

Supposing the Gospels to have been written in the form of narrative epistles, and the observance of such rules to be necessary, I found that the most valuable basis of a harmony was already prepared for me by Eichhorn, one of the most celebrated, though not always the most approvable, of the German theologians. While I rejected, as a theory unsupported by facts, the hypothesis of Bishop Marsh and of Eichhorn,—that there was one original document from which the first three Evangelists derived their Gospels,—I was glad to avail myself of his collection of the events recorded by the first three Evangelists. These events, Bishop Marsh has justly observed, contain a short but well-connected representation of the principal transactions of Christ, from his birth to his ascension. Whatever events are added by one, which are omitted by another, must evidently find their proper place among these. The chronology is settled by the number of Passovers mentioned by St. John: and I have adopted Mr. Benson's theory of the duration of our Lord's ministry, and that view of the chronology which he has given from St. John's Gospel. Eichhorn's arrangement of these events appeared to be the best foundation of a harmony on another account also. The order of St. Matthew's Gospel alone is altered: the order both of St. Mark and of St. Luke is preserved, and from this I have not departed in any instance. I annex the plan of Eichhorn, that the reader may compare its unbroken continuousness with the order proposed by any harmonist which he may have in his possession.

Such being the theory, the rules, and the basis, upon which a Harmony of the New Testament might be advantageously compiled, it remained that I should select those assistants which united most soundness of judgment, profound learning, patient labor, and extensive research. Rejecting the hypotheses both of Osiander and of all who would adhere to the order of any one of the Gospels, in preference to another, I decided to accept as my guides the five principal harmonists, which have not only obtained the general approbation of all parties, but who have been respectively of the most opposite descriptions and classes.

The first is Lightfoot, whose Chronicle of the Old Testament had been made the basis of my preceding labor. His Harmony, though not fully completed, has been welcomed by scholars of all parties. Lightfoot was one of the most learned of the Puritan theologians, and possessed great influence in the Assembly of Divines^o. His Harmony, however, was encumbered with the same disadvantage, which I have mentioned^p as an error in his Chronicle. He places the events recorded in Scripture in too large masses, and thereby destroys the minuteness and consequent perspicuity, which are so essential to a complete view of the sacred history.

To mention Dr. Doddridge, my second guide, is to recall to the recollection of those who interest themselves in these delightful studies, the name of an amiable, learned, and pious man, whose praise is in all the Churches. If I have not uniformly adopted his arrangement, I have been always edified by his devotional reflections. Where his reasoning did not convince, his piety instructed. Where his decisions appeared to be accurate, the union of every quality which can adorn the theological critic rendered his labors doubly grateful. The pride and ornament of the Independent Dissenters, his anxiety to avoid offence never betrayed him into indifference for truth. His liberality never induced him to confound truth with error (a custom which is now extolled as freedom from prejudice), for it was confined to persons, and not to sentiments. Whatever he believed to be true he enforced with a patient gentleness; which was sometimes mistaken for timidity by those who esteem violence or declamation to be one criterion of ministerial faithfulness and Christian zeal. An active partisan of that system of religion, which makes the ground of our acceptance with God to consist of a certain train of feelings, as well as in repentance, faith, and obedience; he has not proceeded to the extremes which generally characterize the commentators of this school. His opinions on the formation and government of Christian churches will not, and cannot, meet with the approbation of the observers of the circumstances related in the Gospels and Acts, and referred to in the apostolic Epistles. He appears to have been fettered by the theory which he had imbibed in early life, and had not rejected in his maturer years. I was not able to receive many of the proposed alterations of this amiable, great, and good man. They sometimes appeared too arbitrary and abrupt.

Pilkington's Evangelical History is my third principal aid in this difficult labor. Pilkington was a country clergyman, and he devoted himself to his work with much patience for many years. He considers St. Mark as the best guide to a harmonizer. Forsaking the old plans of placing the various passages in parallel columns, or in separate paragraphs, he divided the narrative in the manner which I have adopted in the first of these volumes. His omissions of important clauses I found to be very numerous! He has not given the whole contents of the Gospels, but rather formed a continuous narrative, on the plan of a diatessaron, with the Scripture references in the margin. He supposes, too, that our Lord's ministry lasted through five Passovers.

Archbishop Newcome's Harmony appears to be generally and deservedly considered the best work of this kind ever submitted to the public. It has received the sanction of the university of Oxford. It was made the foundation of White's Diatessaron, with some few exceptions. The learned Professor has followed West and Townson in the order of the narrative of the resurrection. He rejects the Archbishop's double institution of the Eucharist, and otherwise varies in the numbering of the sections from 126 to 130. I venture to depart from Archbishop Newcome with great reluctance, and adhere as much as possible to his general order of circumstances.

My fifth and most inaccurate guide is Michaelis, whose brief work, as Bishop Marsh has justly observed, must be considered rather as an index than a harmony. I have, however, chosen him as one of my helpers, because he is the last arranger. He is considered also of high authority among the admirers of the German theologians; and among all who mistake novelty for talent, and the rejection of old opinions for exemption from bigotry.

The plan upon which I have endeavoured to render my consulting of the oracles of God useful to the Christian world is the only point which requires our further attention.

All the harmonies which have hitherto been submitted to the world have been formed on one of two plans. The contents of the four Gospels have been arranged in parallel columns, by which means the whole of the sacred narrative is placed at one view before the reader—or they have been combined into one unbroken story, in which the passages considered by the harmonizer to be unnecessary to the illustration of the narrative are arbitrarily rejected. The former produces great confusion in the mind of the student; the latter appears to place the reader too much at the disposal of the author. The former is the Harmony strictly so called ; the latter is the mere Diatessaron, or Monotessaron. To avoid the inconveniences of both these systems, I have endeavoured to save the reader that embarrassment, which is occasioned by four parallel columns ; and at the same time to combine the Gospels into one order, without leaving the reader to depend entirely on the judgment of the arranger, in the choice of the interwoven passages. My object has been to unite the advantages of both plans. Every text of Scripture is preserved, as in the first, while the evangelical narratives are formed into one connected history, as in the second ; every passage which is rejected from the continuous history being placed at the end of each section, to enable the reader to decide on the propriety of the order which has been adopted by the Arranger. These passages will appear too often as broken and disjointed sentences ; and the conviction of the utility of this plan, and its rendering such evident satisfaction to the laborious or inquiring student, could alone have rendered me patient, under the minute care and anxious fatigue, to persevere till it was completed.

In harmonizing the accounts of the inscriptions on the cross, and the narrative of the resurrection, I have been guided by Townson, West, and Cranfield.

Having decided on the method of disposing the contents of the four Gospels, another question remained with respect to the various periods of time included in the whole of the New Testament. I was not satisfied with the usual mode of dividing the actions of our Lord, according to the number of the Passovers during which he lived upon earth. This plan did not seem to convey any definite idea of the peculiar propriety of the several actions which are recorded of our Saviour. The beauty of the narrative, and the proofs of design and wisdom which are every where discoverable in the Sacred Scriptures, seemed obscured or neglected by harmonizing the several Gospels with reference only to the number of Passovers—or the various journeys of our Lord—or even the perfect arrangement of the events themselves, if they were considered only as a collection of wonderful facts. Much higher and nobler views ought to be taken of the contents of the Sacred Writings. The Christian revelation is the completion of that great system of religion which began at the fall, and will continue till this our state of trial is over. The principal object of an arranger of the New Testament, therefore, ought to be, to place before his readers the gradual development of that dispensation of Christ and of the Holy Spirit, which began with the revival of miracle immediately before the birth of Christ, and terminated with the closing of the Canon of the Scriptures of the New Testament, and the cessation of the miraculous gifts.

It will, I think, appear evident, that an arrangement of the New Testament will be most usefully formed upon this view of the gradual discovery of God to the world. God has imparted the knowledge of his will to the world as men were able to bear it. Without Revelation there would have been no religion : neither is there any proof whatever that man could have invented for himself a system of religious belief. There has never been a Religion of Nature since the world was created. When men were few in number, and had not yet collected in large cities, their reason might have confirmed their conviction of the truth which had been originally revealed to them, respecting the existence and unity of God. The relations of life might have instructed them in the necessity of the observance of certain moral duties. When they had become assembled in cities, and had acquired opulence and security, the necessities of society might have taught them various other moral duties, as well as some system of civil polity ; and all these may in one sense be called Natural Religion. But there is no proof whatever, either from the nature of man, from the probable origin of human society, or from the testimony of Scripture, that man was capable of framing for himself a consistent scheme of religion; and all that Wollaston and other laborious writers have proved on this point is their own ingenuity and talent. The conclusions of philosophical inquirers, in an advanced state of refined society, when they are unsupported by undeniable facts, must be received as speculations, and not as history. I shall briefly dwell on this point; and more fully explain the plan of this Arrangement.

The one only true religion, which derived its origin from God alone, began at the fall, and will be completed only in another state of existence. It is characterized throughout by one peculiar doctrine; the continued superintendence of the affairs of mankind by a Divine Being, who was repeatedly manifested before his permanent incarnation as a man—who is now living in an invisible state, where He is interested in all that concerns the human race—and from which He will again become manifested in a more glorious manner than at any preceding time. This Being was called by the ancient Jews, and by the Evangelist St. John, and by the early fathers, THE WORD OF GOD. In the Old Testament he is called THE ANGEL JEHOVAH; in the New Testament he is revealed to us as JESUS CHRIST. The world in which we live is Christ's world. As He led the Israelites from Egypt to Canaan, so is He leading the family of man into the Paradise of God from which they have fallen.

This Divine Being was present at the creation and the fall of man, and conversed with our parents in Eden. Unless they were, then, instructed in the use of language and the choice of food, as well as in the law of marriage and the knowledge of God, the sagacity with which they were endowed must have been greater than that with which untaught men are now gifted. As God conversed with them, we may fairly conclude he imparted his will to them, and thus Religion commenced from Revelation in a state of innocence⁹.

The first circumstance which we collect from the Sacred Records, after the account of the fall, was the offering of sacrifice. The same Divine Being is represented as still continuing his charge over the fallen race. The offering of an animal in sacrifice to God appears so utterly unreasonable and useless, that I cannot but believe the primitive sacrifice to have originated in the divine command. No other solution can be justly given of the difficulty. Whether the חטאת רבץ be rendered, with Archbishop Magee, "A sin offering coucheth at the door," or with Mr. Davison and our translators, "Sin lieth at the door," is a matter of little moment. Positive evidence cannot be procured. The brevity of Moses in this part appears to have been intentional; his object being to hasten to the history of Abraham. As the superintending being, the Angel Jehovah, was still with them, it is not probable that the first worship of our primeval ancestors would be of their own invention. It is not necessary to suppose that they were fully instructed in the typical meaning of the sacrifice, as the emblem of the atonement. The enactment might have been arbitrary, and commanded as a proof of their obedience, and of their faith in some future development of the meaning of the sacrifice. They appear to have brought their offering at an appointed time ; and mankind have been divided, from the period of the rejection of the sacrifice of Cain, into two opposite parties, the good and evil^r.

After the general destruction of the first race by a flood, which the Angel Jehovah expressly declares was brought on the world by himself^s, he appeared to Noah, and renewed his covenant. When the patriarchal religion, in the various settlements of men, was corrupted by the idolatry which endeavoured to reconcile outward worship with actual vice and speculative error—when they did not like to retain the spirituality of God in their knowledge, but assigned human attributes to the Creator—the same Divine Being renewed and enlarged the revelation of himself to Abraham ; and continued personally to repeat and extend that revelation, by frequent manifestations of his presence, to the descendants of Abraham, to the patriarchs, to Moses, and to the prophets, who at length completed, in their predictions, the anticipated history of their Incarnated Redeemer. All this was done slowly and gradually. The attention of mankind was continually directed to the One Great Deliverer, who should be at once the Prophet, the Priest, and the King—the Sacrifice and the Deity—the Uniter of the divine and human nature—the mysterious and merciful Saviour—the present Protector, and the future Judge of mankind.

The New Testament contains the history of the accomplishment of all these prophecies. We may justly expect to trace in this portion of the Inspired Writings the same gradual revelation which characterized the former. Bishop Law has endeavoured to point out the mode in which the Deity has thus made himself known to mankind, in his work on the theory of religion. The first Lord Barrington published an Essay on the Dispensations, in the order in which they lie in the Bible. In the preface to the Miscellanea Sacra, he observes :—“ The true way to obtain a thorough understanding of the Scriptures would be to make ourselves well acquainted with each of these periods, as they are described and distinguished in the Bible, and as they stand in order of time ; the former of these always preparing for the latter ; and the latter still referring to the former ; so that we must critically understand each of these, before we can have the whole compass of that knowledge, and the proof of it, which the Bible is designed to give us. God having thought fit, at sundry times and in divers manners, or in different parts, sections, or periods,” (Mr. Davison^t translates the words “ in different portions,”) “ πολυμερῶς, καὶ πολυτρόπως, to speak to the fathers by the prophets, and to us by his Son. I am sensible that this is a work that will require much time and care, but the very outlines of such a design would be of great use and service.”

Upon the foundation of such reasoning, I have planned the several divisions of this Arrangement. I trust the order and gradual revelation, which I am of opinion may be observed in the Scriptures of the New Testament, will be better perceived by a short abstract of the contents of the fifteen parts into which the work is portioned. “ I shall be rejoiced (I again quote from Lord Barrington) if ^r See Davison On Primitive Sacrifice, and Archbishop Magee On the Atonement. Mr. Davison's arguments have not shaken my conviction of the divine origin of sacrifice. But this is not the place to discuss this matter. I must not, however, omit here to observe, that another most eminent of our modern theologians has embraced also an opposite opinion on this point. See Mr. Benson's remarks on the sacrifice of Abel in his Sermons on the Difficulties of Scripture.

this attempt should provoke others to study the New Testament in this way, and in all others, that may give such light to the obscure parts of it, as is necessary to satisfy the strict inquirers who are the best friends to religion.”

I. The first part includes the period from the birth of Christ to his temptation. It may be regarded as the introduction to his ministry. This part of the New Testament does not appear to have been considered with the attention it deserves. The careful reader, however, will observe the manner in which it pleased God that the attention of the existing generation should be directed to the Son of Mary, the poor and humble Virgin of the family of David. All the ancient proofs of his peculiar superintendence of the race of Abraham were accumulated at this period. The vision of angels was granted to Zacharias in the temple, the age of miraculous interference returned, and all the priests in the temple, the dwellers at Jerusalem, and consequently the whole nation, who were accustomed to visit Jerusalem every year, must have been acquainted with these events. When his miraculous dumbness ceased, the Spirit of prophecy came upon him, and he predicted the glory of his own son, as the forerunner of the Messiah, together with the approaching blessings of the Messiah's kingdom. The superhuman dream—another mode by which God imparted his will to mankind—was revived in the vision of Joseph. The descent of the Spirit of prophecy upon women was renewed in the salutation of Elisabeth, and the prediction of Anna. The same Spirit of prophecy returned also in the speech of the aged Simeon. The astonishing answers of our Lord in the temple, when he was twelve years of age, must have convinced the learned and aged rabbis then assembled, that the Child thus marked out by these supernatural interpositions was superior to all they had either known or heard of. The public declaration also of the inspired Baptist, and the wonderful manifestation of the Divine Presence at the baptism of Christ, must of themselves have convinced the Jews that their expected Messiah was among them; if they had not perverted their prophecies, and anticipated a temporal deliverer from the Roman dominion.

I have endeavoured at some length to show the difference between the conceptual Logos of the ancients, and the personal Logos of Scripture; and to prove that the Logos of St. John, the Angel Jehovah of the Old Testament, “the Word” of the targumists, and the Lord Jesus Christ, the Messiah of the New Testament, the Founder and only Head of the Christian Church, was the one only manifested Jehovah, the Creator and Preserver of the world. The miraculous conception, and the mystery of the incarnation, demonstrate the Divinity, which was united with the assumed humanity of the condescending Incarnate; and his temptation demonstrates him to be the second Adam, who should retrace the steps of the first, and restore us by his sinless obedience to the Paradise which our primal ancestor had lost. The mysteries with which this sublime system of man's redemption commences will be the subjects of our inquiry when our faculties are enlarged in a future state; and I believe, upon the undeniable evidences which confirm the truth of Christianity—doctrines which I do not comprehend—that the Creator of the world, the Guide of mankind from Paradise to the judgment, was manifested in the flesh, as an infant, a child, and a patient, suffering man.

II. The dispensations of God always blend with each other; distinct, and yet inseparable, as the rays of light, and the colors of the rainbow. Though the way had now been prepared for the public manifestation of Christ to the Jewish nation, he did not openly and publicly declare his claims to the Messiahship of Israel, till the Baptist, the founder of the intermediate dispensation into which men had been baptized, was put into prison. I have placed therefore, as a separate part, the events between the temptation of Christ, and the public assertion of his mission after the imprisonment of John. The reply of the Baptist to the deputation from the authorities at Jerusalem, positively affirming the Messiahship of Him, whom a miraculous descent of the Holy Spirit, and the voice, the Bath Col, had marked as a superhuman being, in the midst of the assembled thousands from Judæa—the uninvited attachment of the disciples of the Baptist to our Lord, when St. John pointed him out as the Lamb of God—the unostentatious miracle at Cana, when the silent operation of our Lord's power began to manifest his still concealed glory—his return to Capernaum with his family, as the preaching of the Baptist continued—his cleansing the temple, by miraculously overawing the mercenary intruders—his still refusing to commit himself—above all these, his annunciation to Nicodemus, that even the sons of Abraham were to be born again into his kingdom—and the final testimony of John, prove the very gradual manner in which our Lord proceeded to attract the attention of his people, and to appeal to their judgment—before he would offend the prejudices of those who expected a temporal Messiah. The first miracle of Christ induced me to draw a parallel between the miraculous evidences which confirm the truth of the Christian religion, with those which demonstrate the divine legation of Moses.

III. Though the ejecting the buyers and sellers from the temple may be considered as a public manifestation of our Lord's Messiahship, he did not verbally assert his claims, till the time when John the Baptist was prevented from appealing to the people. He then returned to his own province, and his own town, where he had been known from his infancy, and there openly declared that the time of the Messiah was at hand. I consider this more public declaration of his mission till the time when the twelve apostles were sent forth to preach, as another stage in our Lord's ministry. On his way to Galilee he conversed with the woman of Samaria, and convinced her, and many of her countrymen, by his conversation and miracles, that he was the expected Messiah; though he would not deviate from his design of first publicly asserting that fact in his own town. After another miracle at Cana, he at length came to Nazareth. It was the custom of the Jews to invite any eminent teacher who might come into their synagogues, to speak to the people. Here, then, having received the book from the reader, he applied to himself a prophecy which predicted the appearance of Christ. He stopped before he came to that clause which denounced threatening and vengeance to the Jews; and confined himself to the beautiful description of the benevolent character of the Messiah. Having applied the prophecy to himself he sat down. He refused to work a miracle among the people of Nazareth; he appeared to desire to show to the world, that his usefulness must be founded on holiness, as well as on his preaching and miracles. They had known him thirty years. Of his manner of life, of his character and conversation during that period, the Evangelists are silent. The appeal of our Lord to the people of Nazareth, after living among them thirty years as a man, may account for their silence. No imperfection, no taint of sin, of weakness, or of folly, could be found through that whole period, to enable those among whom he would be in the least esteem to invalidate his lofty claim to the rank of the Divine Being, whom their prophets had announced. Their only exclamation arose from their ignorance or forgetfulness of the miraculous conception; or perhaps their murmur, "Is not this the carpenter's son?" might proceed from the suppressed indignation, which made them secretly refuse to acknowledge the infinite superiority of one, who had lived among them as an equal.

Galilee was wisely chosen as the scene of our Lord's ministry. It abounded with strangers, Phœnicians, Arabians, and Egyptians. I have endeavoured to show, in a note to the first section of this part, the advantages of this intermixture to the future progress of the Gospel. I am confirmed in my opinion, that our Lord's more public ministry began with his application to himself of the prophecy of Isaiah in Nazareth, from the manner in which he then proceeds to announce the ultimate object of his coming. He declared, for the first time, that as Elijah had been sent to the Gentile of Sarepta, so also was he sent to those who would accept him, and who were not of his own country. Though they could not confute him, they could endeavour to destroy him. The first persecution of our Lord began upon his hinting to his proud and jealous countrymen, that he had "other sheep which were not of this fold." The service of the synagogue was interrupted, and the peace of the town disturbed. This circumstance, as I have shown, explains that part of our Lord's conduct, which many have considered inexplicable. He would not revive on other and similar occasions the same scenes of tumult and exasperation. He proceeded, therefore, with the utmost caution—refusing to call himself the Messiah—charging the persons who were healed to tell no man—and keeping back many things even from the apostles.

The various sections of this part fully display the wisdom which continued thus gradually to impress the people with the conviction that their Messiah had arrived. The disciples who forsook John to follow Christ, and who had returned to their occupation as fishermen, were now commanded to attach themselves permanently to his service, with the prophetic annunciation, that they were in future to become "fishers of men." The healing of the demoniac appears to prove his power over a world of invisible spirits. The cure of diseases demonstrated to the Jews that he possessed the power to forgive the sin which they believed to be the cause of physical evil. By healing the leprosy, a disease which was considered incurable, except by God alone, and by referring the leper who was cured to the priest, he communicated to the priests the secret of his divine character. Soon after this message had been sent to the priests, he openly asserted the power to forgive, which he had already demonstrated by his silent and eloquent miracles. Having attached to him St. Matthew, who was more learned, and better educated than the fishermen of Galilee, and whose presence therefore might be of more weight with the Jews, he publicly wrought a miracle at Jerusalem, and assured the Jews that he was appointed of the Father to judge the world. By dispensing with the enactments of their traditional law, he declared himself the Lord of the Sabbath. By healing the withered hand, he condemned the superstition which preferred the useless observances of a supposed piety, to active and useful benevolence—and having now attracted around him great multitudes of people, and attached to himself twelve disciples, whom he intended to appoint to the apostolic office, he gave the New Dispensation to mankind. He embodied the spirit of the Mosaic Law in the sermon on the mount; and annihilated for ever all other modes of pleasing God, than purity of mind, rectitude of principle, spirituality of soul, and holiness of life.

Having promulgated his new dispensation, our Saviour healed the servant of the centurion, who was probably a Gentile; and he again hinted to the Jews the conversion of the Gentiles. By healing the widow's son, he proved his power over the laws of life and death, and again demonstrated to the Jews, upon their own principles, that He was that Messiah whom they expected to raise the dead. The message of John, who was still in prison, enabled our Lord to point out the real Elias, who was to precede the Messiah; it appears to have given occasion to his bitter reproach of the impenitent cities of Judæa, which he concludes, however, with an invitation to all to receive his mission. Various miracles and instructions follow, till the time arrived when the foundation of the Christian Church should be laid in the appointment of twelve apostles; who should possess equal power, and equal authority to assert the present existence of the Messiah in Judæa, and the spiritual nature of the kingdom which he had come to establish.

The principal notes in this part, in addition to those on the history and dates, refer to the possible or probable existence of the types of the New Testament—a subject which has never, I believe, been sufficiently considered by theologians. To which must be added the notes on the demoniacs—the bearing of our sins by Christ—the conduct of our Lord respecting the Jewish Sabbath, the Jewish traditional observances, and others of this nature.

IV. The fourth part includes the time from the mission of the twelve apostles to that of the seventy. In the note to the former of these events, I have entered at some length into the question of church government. An opinion has very generally of late years prevailed in society, that all inquiries on this subject are useless, and that our conclusions are of no importance. It is said that sincerity is equally acceptable with the Deity, whatever be our form of worship; and as our opinions are out of our own power, we cannot be responsible for involuntary decisions. It has been said also, that the Deity has not preferred one form of discipline to another, or it would have been plainly revealed.

Reasonings of this nature do not appear to me to be satisfactory. I would reply to them by observing, that the peace and order of society have hitherto been dependent on the conclusions of the student in his closet. Armies are moved and states are shaken by the effects of the prevalence of opinions, which are proposed or defended by the more retired and reflecting. Discussion elicits truth; and the establishment of truth alone can bestow peace and happiness. Our conclusions, therefore, upon the subject of church government must and will be of importance so long as the usurpations of the papacy and the divisions of parties continue to agitate mankind. As far as the happiness of society in this world is concerned, it is impossible that the sincerity of error can be equally acceptable to God with the sincerity of truth. Happiness is connected with truth rather than with sincerity; and that which most promotes the happiness of man must be more pleasing to God, than the sincerity which causes persecution. The form of worship which I believe to be proposed in the New Testament would have effectually preserved the world from the sincerity of persecution; for it would have prevented the intolerable assumption of that ecclesiastical dominion, which was founded on usurpation, and is supported by intolerance and ignorance.

But it is said our opinions are not in our own power. The position is too general to be accurate. Opinions are not involuntary, when we possess the means of examining their evidence and foundation. I reserve, till another opportunity, an inquiry into the criteria of moral and religious truth.

The most objectionable of the notions to which I refer is, the assertion that the Deity has not preferred one mode of discipline to another, or it would have been more plainly revealed.

I have endeavoured to show that a plan of church government was so plainly revealed, that it was uniformly acted upon for fifteen centuries. That plan is founded upon the one simple and general proposition, that the Church of God was to be composed of several societies, each of which should be united by this one rule—that no person should assume any spiritual office without the permission of those superiors to whom the power of ordaining, confirming, and regulating the Churches had lawfully and regularly descended. Every Church might consist of many congregations, and was independent of its neighbours; Episcopacy alone being the bond of union among all Christians. The collision of opinions which has taken place since the Reformation has prevented the adherents of this form of church government from so uniformly maintaining this truth as it was their duty to do. They shrank from the appearance of defending a position, with which their own interest was identified. The consequence has been, that Episcopalians have been long considered merely as the principal sect among Christians—and Christianity itself as a collection of disputable opinions supported by a variety of sects. The members of the Reformed Episcopal Churches ought to have remembered, that they were required in defence of truth to submit to reproach and insult in every form.

The coincidence does not appear to be merely accidental, that the Baptist should be put to death at the time when the twelve apostles were sent forth. The old dispensation had now done its work. The schoolmaster led the people to Christ, and the twelve went forth to bring them in to their Divine Lawgiver. The foundations of the Christian Church were laid, Christ and his apostles being the corner stones. He now continued his miracles and teaching; by correcting the opinions of the people on their Jewish traditions—healing the Syro-Phœnician, as the earnest of the future healing of the Gentiles, a doctrine never wholly lost sight of—feeding the four thousand, who had probably followed him in the anticipation that he would save them from the Roman yoke. When our Lord healed a blind man about this time, St. Peter first declared his conviction in more express and decided terms, that the Prophet of Nazareth was the Messiah. Upon this confession our Lord declares his Church to be built; and predicts to St. Peter, that he should become its second founder, by first opening its gates to the Gentile world. He then astonishes the Apostle by prophesying his approaching death; and confirms the faith of his wondering disciples, whose minds were confounded with the apparent inconsistency between his asserted dignity and his anticipated degradation, by that scene which visibly opened the union of the two worlds,—the transfiguration on the mount. While their minds were still impressed with the remembrance of his glory, he again predicted his sufferings, and submitted, as a man who was bound by the political regulations of society, to the demand for tribute. The chapter concludes with the contention among the disciples for superiority. They could not, till the Holy Spirit had illumined their minds, understand the doctrine of a spiritual kingdom. They saw that Christ could have maintained an army without expense—they saw the people eager to follow him—and they imagined that the Roman yoke would be thrown off at an early opportunity.

The principal notes refer to some of the Jewish traditions—our Lord's applying to himself certain expressions, by which the Jews described their Messiah, and the nature of the Messiah whom they expected. The address to St. Peter—the disputing of the apostles—and the transfiguration are briefly considered as interesting subjects of inquiry to the theological student.

V. The fifth part embraces the next great division of our Lord's ministry,—the period from the mission of the seventy to his own triumphant entry into Jerusalem. As the victim was led to the altar garlanded with flowers, and followed by the acclamations of the people; so was our Great Sacrifice adorned for the altar of the cross. Few remarks are necessary on the contents of this part. The deeper impression produced by the preaching of his apostles and of the seventy, and by his own wonderful example, miracles, and teaching, began to appear more plainly. The agitation of the public mind at Jerusalem—the public assertion of his preëxistence—his increased boldness as his personal danger became greater—his more numerous cautions to his disciples—his assertion of his Divinity, and the consequent resolution of the Jews to apprehend him—successively prove the wisdom of the plan upon which our Lord acted, of gradually convincing the people, and then submitting to his painful death. No sooner was the resolution taken to seize him, than his lamentations over Jerusalem begin—his parables assume a more prophetic character, descriptive of the reception of the Gentiles, and the rejection of the Jews. At length he goes on to work his greatest miracle, the raising of Lazarus from the dead, and with that (which appears to have been publicly performed before many of the rulers, who were eager to apprehend him), to discontinue the appeal to the Jews by this kind of evidence. If he had wrought miracles at Jerusalem, it would have appeared that he desired to excite the people to rebellion. The whole nation were now made acquainted with his pretensions, and with the evidence upon which they were supported. He entered, therefore, Jerusalem amidst the shouts of the people, in a manner so remarkable, that he evidently fulfilled a prophecy of Zachariah. I have inquired, in a note to this passage, from a review of the history of the Jews, from the date of the prophecy to the destruction of the temple, whether the prediction can be applied to any ruler of Israel, under any dynasty of its own, or of its foreign sovereigns.

VI. The sixth part relates the conduct of the Holy Jesus from his triumphant entry into Jerusalem, till his submission to the Roman guard, to whom he was betrayed. I have generally avoided devotional remarks on the New Testament, because every commentator abounds with them; and because they obviously present themselves to the mind of every reader of this wonderful and beautiful book.

I have, however, sometimes deviated from my rule, and was more especially tempted to do so, when I contemplated the joyful entry of our atoning Saviour into his once “holy city.” The cleansing of the temple, the miraculous withering of the fig tree, and the voice from heaven, when the Greeks of the dispersion asked to see Him, were sufficient to attest his divine power; but they were not miracles sufficiently splendid to attract universal notice, and to excite the jealousy of the Pharisees. As the time of his betrayal was come, He did not hesitate to reprove, with more boldness than he had hitherto shown, all the sects among his countrymen. He commanded the Herodians to “render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar’s, and unto God the things that are God’s.” To the Sadducees he explained, from the books of Moses, the doctrine of the resurrection. The inconsistency of the apparently austere, but in reality immoral, Pharisee is rebuked with unsparing and indignant severity. The prophetic parables, the prediction of the fall of Jerusalem, and the allusions to the great event of which it was typical—his institution of the eucharist, to be received by us all till He shall again come to judge the living and the dead—his exhortations to his disciples, his promises of his Holy Spirit, his meekness, his gentleness, and his love present the perfect portrait, which the simple pen of inspiration alone can adequately describe. The view, which I have submitted to the reader, of the agony in the garden of Gethsemane appears to be justified by the various circumstances which prove our Lord to be the second Adam. Our faculties must be enlarged in another state of existence before we can comprehend the mysteries of Revelation. "One little part alone we dimly scan," that our faith may be strengthened with an earnest of the future great discoveries of God and his government, which shall await us in eternity.

VII. From the apprehension of Christ to the crucifixion. The Lamb of God is sacrificed—the atonement is accepted—and man is pardoned! All unite to reject our Lord. His disciples deserted him—the most zealous of their number denied him—the high priest insulted him—the servants mocked him—the soldiers spat in his face, and ridiculed his pretensions—the Sanhedrin condemned him. Though his betrayer declared the innocence of his victim—though Pilate acquitted him—though his accusers agreed not together, yet the heads of opposing factions unite to destroy him. The power of Rome, the religious hatred of an apostate Church, the changeable populace, who perhaps imagined their clamors were the voice of God, all combined to fulfil the prophecies, and murder the willing Sacrifice, who was about to intercede for them all. Our Lord never forgot his Divinity in the midst of these scenes. When he was dying as a man he forgave sins as a God. He refused to deliver his assumed body from the cross, but he declared his power as Lord of the invisible world. I have fully expressed my opinion on this point in the twenty-fifth note to the present part. I believe the death of Christ to be a mysterious atonement for the sins of man. I have no hope of everlasting happiness, but from my faith in this mysterious atonement. I believe this doctrine to be the one peculiar, fundamental, and characteristic truth of Revelation. I humbly prostrate my reason to the God who has given Revelation to guide us, as the best proof of my most rational homage to the Deity; and I pray that the consolation which I derive from this faith in the atonement of our only Lord and Saviour, may never be shaken by the presumptuous conclusions, and the shallow speculations of the philosophy which rejects Revelation.

VIII. From the resurrection to the ascension. I have already mentioned the authorities upon which I have divided this part. The reflections upon our Lord's ascension, in the forty-third note to this part, are such as every Christian will adopt who believes in the immortality revealed in Scripture.

IX. Before the Gospel was offered to the Gentiles, the apostles made their appeal exclusively to their own brethren. Our Lord had told the Jews, that their rejection of his ministry should be forgiven them; but their refusal to be convinced by the miraculous gifts of the Holy Spirit should neither be forgiven in this nor in the future world. The present part gives an account of the preaching of the apostles from the ascension to the time for the calling in of the Gentiles, and the miraculous conversion of St. Paul to Christianity for that purpose.

The first section of this most interesting part presents us with a view of the return to Jerusalem of the timid disciples of Christ, and their meeting for devotional purposes in one of the hyperoa, or upper rooms, in which the Jews were accustomed to celebrate their Passovers; totally unconscious of their lofty destiny, as the moral and religious renovators of mankind. I have taken the opportunity in beginning this part, to request the reader to compare the claims of Christianity to the homage of a rational and immortal being, with the pretensions of any of the absurd speculations which have insulted the reason and debased the morals of society. It will be perceived that I have not availed myself of any part of Mr. Faber's work on the same subject. The note was written before his book was submitted to the public.

The election of Matthias, related in the second section, has been generally considered an argument for the popular election of the clergy. We live under this curse, that whatever form of regimen we adopt, whether in church or state, thorns and thistles must be produced. Our own wisdom and prudence may increase or diminish their number; but some evil will be found, and we try in vain to escape from it. To avoid one class of real or supposed grievances in the appointment of the clergy, without appeal to the congregation, other, and sometimes greater, evils have been preferred by popular elections. By these, the errors of the people are perpetuated, where the opinions of the congregation are erroneous. The teacher is compelled to preach the sentiments of his hearers; and to learn implicitly where he ought to instruct freely. As no dominion is more cruel, arbitrary, capricious, and unjust than the dominion of large and therefore irresponsible bodies; so no slavery is so intolerable as subserviency to their fluctuating opinions.

The prayer of the disciples, at the election of Matthias, may be considered as one proof of their acknowledgment of the Divinity of our Lord.

We are brought, in the third section, to that wonderful event, by which the ignorant, timid, prejudiced disciples of our Lord obtained, in one instant, by the especial Providence of God, advantages, accomplishments, knowledge, and every other requisite qualification for the noble office, which would have otherwise required the labor of many years. Endued with power from on High, they became at once prudent legislators, sober and learned judges, eloquent preachers, liberal without compromising truth, tolerant without religious indifference. Through the whole of the remainder of the New Testament, the apostles appeal to the miraculous gifts of healing, of languages, of discerning of spirits. The contrast of their present and former conduct demonstrates the internal change which had taken place. Without these assistances, indeed, the religion which commanded the submission of the passions, for the sake of a crucified criminal, whom they asserted to have been a Divine Being, could never have prevailed. The immediate effects of this great event are related in the next sections, the accession of converts, and, what must now appear almost as wonderful, the union of Christians in this truly primitive church. They were neither divided by absurd jealousy, by the pride of intellect, by adherence to some strange errors, to which their fathers pledged themselves, and which did not die away with the political events, or foolish controversies, in which they originated. They were neither influenced by the fear of offending, by a regard to self-interest, by attachment to opinions which they received without inquiry, and maintained without examination. Truth, confirmed by undeniable evidence, and demonstrated by irresistible argument, was the object they pursued and obtained.

After the conversion of the cripple, the attention of the people of Jerusalem was so much excited, that the Sanhedrin ordered the apostles to be summoned; and inquired what new imposition was about to be practised on the Jewish nation. How unbounded must have been the rage and indignation of the Sanhedrin, who were in daily expectation of a powerful and temporal Messiah, a conqueror of the Romans, and an elevator of the Jewish nation to the height of political power; when the fishermen of Galilee stood before them, and affirmed, that the condemned and innocent Victim from Nazareth was the true and long-expected Messiah; and that the Sanhedrin had murdered their heaven-descended Sovereign! In the note to section eight, I have given the parallel between Christ and Moses, whose prediction St. Peter had applied to our Saviour. To what extent this parallel may have been explained is uncertain. If the Sanhedrin heard of this application, they must have been more highly enraged. They imagined they had crucified the new religion when they crucified its Founder. They had but nurtured with blood the seed which should grow into the tree, which should refresh the world with its leaves, and the Church with its fruits of life. Annas and Caiaphas, and the most learned talmudists, the eminent, the honorable, and the noble, were assembled to hear the defence of the despised fisherman, whom they insulted for his deficiency in the only learning which their intellectual vanity esteemed. Another extraordinary descent of the Holy Spirit is related in section eleven, to encourage and animate the converts at this beginning of their predicted persecutions. The Church continued at peace, wealthy, flourishing, and united.

With this abundant prosperity began the corruption of the Church. Ambition, a more powerful passion than avarice, which is its minister only, divided the infant community. Ananias first desired eminence by his apparent liberality; he might have wished also, as many have supposed, to obtain a more ample provision, at some future period, from the funds of the Church. The custom now began, which in Christian societies has never been discontinued, of maintaining the poor from some permanent fund afforded by the voluntary benevolence of the wealthy.

From the fourteenth to the twentieth sections, we read of the gradual progress of the new faith. The repetition of his assertion by St. Peter, that the crucified and innocent Nazarene was the real Messiah, made the Sanhedrin resolve to punish the apostles with death. They were checked by the advice of Gamaliel. The increasing numbers of the Church made the election of new officers necessary, who should peculiarly devote themselves to those duties which interfered with the proper discharge of the higher and apostolic office. The apostles prescribed the qualifications of the deacons, and approved of the choice of the people. This subject is partially discussed in the note to the eighteenth section. In the note to the following section I have endeavoured to show that Mr. Benson's Chronology of the Life of Christ, which I have adopted from a full conviction of its accuracy, is consistent with the prophecy of the seventy weeks by the Prophet Daniel.

In the twentieth section we read of the breaking out of the persecution, in which St. Stephen was martyred, while testifying the Divinity of Christ, and asserting, in the presence of St. Paul, at that time one of his persecutors, that he saw the glory which had been seen by their patriarchal ancestors; and that the crucified Jesus of Nazareth was the Personage who appeared with it. The ancient Jews believed that the Angel Jehovah was the manifested God of their fathers; and Stephen, in his dying moments, declared that Jesus of Nazareth and the Angel Jehovah were the same Being. This was blasphemy to the Jews, who considered our Lord as a man; and it must have shocked the unbelieving zealot, who afterwards became the Apostle of the Gentiles. But the assertion of St. Stephen shows to us yet further, how beautifully the dispensations of God blend one with another, and rest upon the same evidence. St. Paul must have remembered the dying exclamation of the proto-martyr, when he was himself favored with the opening of the invisible world, and with the appearance of the same Angel Jehovah, Jesus of Nazareth. If St. Paul, as a learned Jew, had been required to select the only evidence which could convince him that Jesus was the Christ, it is probable that he would have demanded the appearance of the Shechinah, and the manifested God of his ancestors. This was vouchsafed to him at his conversion, when the Jesus, whom Stephen saw standing at the right hand of God, appeared to him in the same glory, and told him, "I am Jesus," the manifested God of thy fathers, the Angel Jehovah, "whom thou persecutest."

In consequence of the Pauline persecution, the apostles were dispersed from Jerusalem; and the converts, who were probably gifted with miraculous powers for that purpose, every where preached the new religion. The provinces of Judæa now received Christianity. Samaria began to abound with converts, to whom the gifts of the Holy Spirit were imparted by the hands of St. Peter and St. John; the apostles alone, as the higher order in the priesthood of Christianity, possessing authority to confer them. From this circumstance the ancient Church confined the power of confirming to the bishops, as the successors of the apostles, in those ordinary acts of authority, which they considered essential to all Christian Churches. When the provinces of Judæa were thus Christianized, the time for appealing to the Jews, and the Proselytes of Righteousness (among whom was the treasurer of Queen Candace), appears to have come to its proper termination. The Gospel of St. Matthew was probably now written for the use of the scattered communities; and the Pauline persecution is unexpectedly terminated by the sudden interposition of Divine Providence, in the conversion of its principal agent. This event is related in the thirty-first section.

In the note to the thirty-first section, I have briefly considered the inferences which have been sometimes deduced from the history of St. Paul's conversion, that no man can be a Christian who does not experience some miraculous change or interposition of a similar nature. It must be remembered, that St. Paul was not the chief of profligates, but chief of the opponents of the Gospel. This is the proper meaning of his appellation, "the chief of sinners." It is more than questionable, whether the sudden demonstration of the truth of Christianity, which was now enforced on the mind of St. Paul, as the very best and most unsuspecting agent, by whom Christianity might be dispersed with the most effect, can be considered as an argument in favor of the doctrine of the sudden conversions of educated Christians, who are acquainted from their infancy with the Scriptures, and know why Christ rose from the dead.

With the preaching of St. Paul, the miracles of St. Peter, and the repose of the Churches, this part terminates. I have considered, at some length, the doctrine and government of the Church at Jerusalem, the model for all succeeding Churches. I have devoted some time to this point, because an attentive perusal of the Holy Scriptures alone has convinced me, that Jesus Christ is the Lawgiver of nations as well as the Saviour of individuals. My Bible, my only religion, has taught me, that Christ descended from heaven, neither to form separate congregations of good and devotional individuals—nor to unite the world under one ecclesiastical domination. He came to make every separate kingdom one great religious family; and thus to extinguish, over the whole earth, wars abroad and factions at home, and all political evils, of what kind soever, by religious peace and mutual love. God wills the present as well as the future happiness of man; and Christianity, rightly understood, is the only means by which the divine object will eventually be accomplished.

X. The time had now fully come in which the exclusive appeal to the Jews was to cease, and the new dispensation to begin; when the Gospel was to be preached to other nations. This part includes the period between the vision of St. Peter, which announced the enlargement of the Church, and the mission of St. Paul to the idolatrous Gentiles. The vision of St. Peter was the commencement of the fulfilment of our Lord's prophecy, "On this rock I will build my Church.” The dissertation of Bernard Duysing, in the Critici Sacri, on this subject is exceedingly curious. Some extracts are given from it in the note, together with the interpretation of Jones of Nayland.

A discussion arose between some distinguished theologians in the last century on the Proselytes of the Jews. The first Lord Barrington adopted and learnedly defended the usual opinion, that in addition to the Proselytes of Righteousness, who engaged to fulfil the whole Law of Moses, there was also another class who professed their belief in the God of the Jews, but who did not bind themselves by the more burthensome ceremonial. Dr. Doddridge and Dr. Lardner, and, on the authority of their arguments, Dr. Hales, have differed from Lord Barrington, and asserted the existence of the former Proselytes only. Michaelis, Dr. Graves, Selden, Witsius, Spencer, Schoetgen, Lightfoot, and others, to whom reference is made in the first note, support the opinion of Lord Barrington, though they have not noticed the controversy. I have adopted the general supposition. The existence of a large class of persons of the same description as Cornelius, who should receive the new religion before it was preached to the idolaters of the surrounding country, appears to have been a wise provision for the continuance of that gradual and silent progress, by which Christianity was to be extended through the world.

The New Dispensation was not at first generally received. The converts, who were scattered from Jerusalem by the Pauline persecution, preached to the Jews only. The Church at Jerusalem was astonished at the intelligence, that the Proselytes of the Gate were to be admitted into the Church; and they commissioned Barnabas to make inquiry. Saul, who seems to have been now merely a private though eminent teacher, is associated with him; and, on their arrival at Antioch, which may be called the first metropolis of the Christian cities, the adherents of the new religion are called by the now most honorable of all human appellations. Many have been of opinion, that the title of Christian was given by divine appointment. It seems probable that some designation was necessary to distinguish the Christians from the Jews, with whom they were at first identified.

Now that the new religion had become so firmly established, that it embraced another large class of persons, the lives of the apostles ceased to be essential to the existence of the rising Church. They consequently became subject to the plans of their enemies. One of them was put to death; the rest appear to have been scattered from Jerusalem; and the power, which had at first been common to them all, was concentrated in one, who was left at Jerusalem, in the time of the greatest danger to protect and govern the Church.

I have considered, at greater length than was perhaps necessary, the opinion that St. Peter, after his miraculous escape from prison, was sheltered at Rome. Many Protestant writers have asserted that he was never in that city. The evidence appears to be more favorable to the other supposition; and it is probable that St. Mark's Gospel was now written under the inspection, or at the dictation of St. Peter. The perversion of the Romanist theologians on the subject of St. Peter's residence at Rome is well known. The supremacy of St. Peter is a fiction; it is the upas tree of Christianity; it has poisoned the fairest shrubs and flowers in the garden of the Church. It has changed the peaceful religion of the mild and holy Saviour into a series of political controversies; from which have originated civil wars, alienations of princes from their people, and of people from their princes, and all the civil commotions which have prevented the progress of Christianity; which have given its principal triumph to infidelity, and every where degraded religion. If the blundering interpreters, who have assigned this imaginary supremacy to St. Peter, had granted it to St. Paul, they would have been more able to defend their folly; St. Peter was the minister of the circumcision, St. Paul was the apostle of the Gentiles, of whom the Romans were the chief; and he openly reproved St. Peter for the conduct which he thought worthy of censure.

The remainder of this part relates the continued increase of the Churches till the actual appointment of St. Paul to the mission to which he had been so long designated.

XI. We now arrive at the dispensation under which we ourselves live, when the Gospel was preached to the idolatrous Gentiles. In consequence of his divine appointment, St. Paul received the sanction of the heads of the Church at Antioch, to his mission, and became their apostle. This part contains the account of his first apostolical journey. The principal points considered in the notes to this part are, the similarity between the service of the synagogue and that of the early Church, the question of predestination, the apostolical decree, and the nature of the spiritual gifts, titles, and offices in the Church of Antioch. Vitringa, who was both a theorist and a zealous Presbyterian, has endeavoured to establish the identity of the early church government with that of the synagogue. I have pointed out various instances in which the supposed parallel entirely fails. If indeed it could be shown to be complete, the similarity would prove nothing with respect to the question concerning Episcopacy. As the Jewish synagogues were under the control of the heads of their religion at Jerusalem, while each congregation might possibly have some observances peculiar to itself; so also the Christian Churches were never independent of the apostolical authority, though each might perhaps vary in certain non-essential particulars.

XII. The twelfth part contains an account of the second apostolical journey of St. Paul. Observant of our Lord's direction, that his evangelists should not go out alone, because "in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word was to be established," the Apostle, having chosen Silas after his separation from Barnabas, proceeds on his journey with Timothy, whom he met with on his arrival at Derbe. Our Lord's promise, that his apostles should possess authority over all the power of the enemy, was fulfilled at Philippi. In a former part of the Arrangement the opinions respecting demoniacal possession are considered at some length. The case of the Pythoness at Philippi appears to afford additional evidence in support of the general opinion, that the instances mentioned in Scripture must be literally interpreted.

In the tenth section of this part we come to the first of those most important portions of the Inspired Writings, the Epistles of Paul. As no part of the Scriptures have been more frequently misinterpreted than these Epistles, I have endeavoured to submit to the reader, at the head of each Epistle, a brief statement of the proposition which St. Paul intended to establish; and so to analyze the Epistle itself, that the nature of the arguments, by which that proposition is established, may be clearly seen. The primary meaning of every verse may be thus more probably ascertained; and the universal adaptation of the Epistles to the circumstances of the Churches of Christ, in all ages, be more distinctly pointed out. I reject the hypotheses of Semler, and of Taylor of Norwich, as well as the reasonings of his follower, Mr. Belsham; who would destroy the peculiar doctrines of Christianity, by endeavouring to prove that the terms and phrases which are used by St. Paul have an exclusive reference to the disputes of the apostolic age, respecting the admission of the Gentiles into the Church of God, and are therefore to be interpreted as alluding only to the privileges of the visible Church. While it must be allowed that the existing controversy between the Jews and the apostles, on this point, ought to be kept in view, whenever the chief Epistles are studied, we shall utterly mistake the nature of that sublimer object which the Deity proposed when he gave inspiration to his servants, if we attempt to confine their teaching and arguments to the advantages of a visible Church, and to the impartation to the idolatrous Gentiles of a purer system of morality. Their object was rather to prove, that if God admitted the Jews into a visible Church upon earth, as an earnest and proof that they should be hereafter admitted into a higher state of purity and happiness above; the same mercy would receive the Gentiles into this higher glory, and consequently, as an inferior privilege, would receive them into a more extensive and visible Church upon earth. On this account it is that the doctrines of the Trinity, the Incarnation, and the Atonement, (without which essential truths is no Christianity,) are so repeatedly and earnestly insisted upon. They are our pledges of future discoveries of God when we shall rise from the dead. If any revelation be given us from above, we might justly expect that some internal evidence of its truth would be afforded, in addition to the outward facts which demonstrate its divine origin. That internal evidence, among other doctrines, would probably consist in some account of the Deity, which could not have been discovered by reason; and which would be the one, peculiar, characteristic, and mysterious foundation of the whole fabric of truth. This doctrine would be so interwoven with the system of revelation, that it would be alike found in the beginning, the middle, and the end. The removal of it would be attended with the conviction of the utter uselessness and unreasonableness of the remainder. It would be consistent with the analogy of faith; it would be proportionate to the greatness of the soul of man; it would be capable of exciting that internal feeling of indefinitude which uniformly attends our contemplation of the visible world, by whatever branch of science we attempt to explore it, and whether the microscope or telescope be called to our assistance. Such internal evidence, such mysterious, essential truth, is to be found only in the doctrine of the atonement of Christ—a Divine and an Incarnate Being. It ought not to excite surprise that the admirers of the powers of human reason have so uniformly endeavoured to overthrow this truth. Salvation by a crucified Redeemer, who was at once a manifested and predicted God, though He was found in fashion as a man, and was despised and rejected of men, ever was and ever will be our only real hope; while it is the object of unabated scorn both to the deifiers of human intellect, and to all the deistical critics of the New Testament. Impressed with these convictions, while I endeavour to ascertain the primary meaning of an Epistle, I never attempt to bring down the lofty speculations of the inspired writer from the battlements of heaven to the walls of the visible Church. Without losing sight of the controversies of the apostolic age, I have not endeavoured to pervert the meaning of any one passage, by forcibly applying it to these disputes.

The notes to each Epistle contain a brief account of their origin, date, place, and necessity. These will be found to be taken from our popular writers. The usual sources of our knowledge of these subjects have now been so thoroughly explored, that little addition is to be expected, unless we are willing to invent some new theory, or defend some strange paradox.

The conduct of St. Paul at Athens, amidst the contempt which the speculative philosophers of the academy felt and expressed for the Hebrew teacher, suggested some remarks on the best mode by which the missionary and the disputant, whether among heathens or infidels, may at once conciliate his hearers and advocate truth. In a note to another part of this section I have briefly considered some of those inquiries which in our early age are so deeply interesting; but which we are generally contented to resign to their own difficulty in our maturer years. The utter impossibility of solving the problems respecting the nature and attributes of God, concerning the permission of evil, the existence of matter, the origin of the universe, the sources of action with the Deity, and many others, is one great proof of our future immortality, and of our eternal improvement.

In the fourteenth section we come to the First Epistle to the Thessalonians. The Epistle to the Galatians had been written to prove the reasonableness of the doctrine, that the Gentiles were to be readmitted into the Church of God. This Epistle contains a brief statement of the evidences in favor of Christianity; and, as the Inspired Writings were read in all the Churches, we may consider the First Epistle to the Thessalonians as a supplement to the former.

The next section gives us an account of the preaching of St. Paul at Corinth. While he continued in that city he addressed another Epistle to the Thessalonians, to remove a misinterpretation of his former letter, concerning the second coming of Christ. He assures them, that the early descent of our Lord to judgment is not to be expected till a great apostacy had begun, and flourished, and was overthrown. The marks which distinguish this apostacy describe the Church of Rome. I have not, however, on my own authority represented Popery as the predicted apostacy. The arguments which have proved satisfactory to the great majority of Protestants on this subject are principally taken from Dr. Benson. Being convinced by these arguments, that the corrupt Church of Rome is described by St. Paul, as the great sin of Christianity, I have not hesitated to express and defend that opinion. To maintain Protestantism, and to oppose Popery, is not the cause of the Church of England, or of the English nation alone; it is the cause of all mankind. To resist that dominion is the solemn and bounden duty of every man who wishes well to the human race, or who desires universal ecclesiastical and civil freedom. The giant which once bestrode the civilized world like a Colossus is restless, and struggling beneath the weight of increasing knowledge; but his convulsive movements still shake the whole of Christendom, and his breath is the furnace of the volcano. We may mark the literary infidelity of the age, and the ancient superstitions of papal Rome ascending from the opposite sides of the intellectual horizon, and overshadowing the nation with their frowns. Our duty must be to strengthen the Protestant institutions—to promote the plans of good which aim at the enlightening of mankind—to sacrifice to truth as well as to candor, and to plead for the union which may be founded upon useful laws. It may be questioned whether truth does not flourish more in an age of controversy than of religious indifference. Christianity would never have established its unyielding peculiarities of opinion, discipline, and holiness, if the apostles had consented to forego their zeal and diligence, in deference to popular clamor, compromised error, or the political plans of their superiors. Truth was their only, their undivided object. From this they were neither intimidated, nor perverted, nor seduced; till by their preaching, and their writing, and their perseverance, they gave their perfect example to the Christian teacher; and erected the Church and the Religion of Christ upon the ruins of every existing error. Their successors have lately desisted from the wars of the tongue and of the pen; and the consequence has been, that Christian union is destroyed, truth is trodden under foot, and religious indifference, assuming the name of liberality, demands and receives the general homage. The marks of our alienation are now so deeply worn that we might fear we shall never meet but in the grave—that we never shall worship together as one great family of God, till we rise from the dead, and bow before His throne in the invisible world.

On the authority of Michaelis and Dr. Hales, I have assigned an early date to the Epistle to Titus. The vow at Cenchrea—the disputes at Ephesus—and the return of St. Paul to Antioch—terminate the part.

XIII. The third apostolical journey of St. Paul presents us with the same kind of history as the preceding. Proceeding from Antioch to the Churches which he had planted in Galatia and Phrygia, he remained two years in Ephesus, and sent Timothy and Erastus to Macedonia and Greece. From Ephesus he writes his First Epistle to the Corinthians, to reprove the irregularities and disorders which had begun to divide the Church of Corinth; and to answer various questions, in doctrine and discipline, which had been proposed to him by his converts. The Apostle has been supposed, in this letter, to deny his own plenary inspiration. This opinion is considered in the note, principally from the labors of the lamented Rennell.

The success of St. Paul at Ephesus at length endangered the profits of the shrine-makers of the temple of Diana. By their means he is compelled to retire to Macedonia, when he writes his First Epistle to Timothy; to direct him how to suppress the false doctrines which the Jewish zealots were endeavouring to introduce into the Church at Ephesus, over which Timothy had been appointed. The Gospel had now made such progress that it had become necessary, as in the instance of Titus, and now of Timothy, to place in large districts persons who should ordain ministers, and maintain discipline among the Churches. When the converts were required to submit to the authority which was now established over them, they began to question the right of the apostles to control and govern them. Thus we find in the eleventh section, that St. Paul wrote from Macedonia his Second Epistle to the Corinthians, to vindicate his authority, and to caution his people against the influence of false teachers. By thus reading the Epistles in their connexion with the history, and considering them in their consecutive order, we see the manner in which the Churches were agitated, and the necessity of discipline, as well as of devotion, in all Christian societies. In this Epistle to the Corinthians, St. Paul observes the same conduct which but a short time before he had so earnestly recommended to Timothy. The two Epistles reflect light on each other, and give us a more accurate notion, when thus considered together, of the state of the primitive Churches.

It is not necessary that I should add in this place any remarks to those which will be found in the note to the thirteenth section of this part, the Epistle to the Romans. Its object is to prove that Christ alone was the Author of that one sublime plan of redemption which included all mankind at the beginning, and which was intended to embrace the Gentiles once more within the Church of God; though for a season, on account of the Gentile idolatry, it had been confined to the family of Abraham. The prediction of the present state of the Jews, while their temporal polity was still flourishing, and of the eventual restoration of that people to the Christian Church, demonstrates the extent of the prophetic gifts which had been imparted to the apostles.

The history proceeds to relate St. Paul's journeys over various parts of Asia—his presenting himself to St. James, the head of the Church at Jerusalem—his apprehension in that city—his defence, and appeal to his privilege as a Roman citizen to save himself from the indignation of his own countrymen. We meet with another instance in the twenty-sixth section of the inveterate hatred which the Jews still continued to bear against the opinion which St. Paul so strenuously advocated, that the Gentiles were to be received into the Church.

In the twenty-eighth section we are presented with St. Paul's appearance, for the first time since his conversion, before the Jewish Sanhedrin. The brief narrative of St. Luke does not stop to inform us of the mingled rage, and hatred, and contempt, with which they must have returned the earnest look of the Apostle, when he stood before them. They had granted him high powers and a great military command. He had been admitted to their confidence—he had distinguished himself, when a young man, by his ardent zeal in their cause. He now stood before them, the betrayer of their imagined interests—an apostate and a criminal. The high priest commanded him to be struck, on account of the supposed insult, when St. Paul began the defence of his apparently inconsistent conduct, with asserting that he had lived in all good conscience before God, until that day. The manner in which the Apostle divided his judges among themselves—his subsequent encouragement to persevere—the conspiracy of the Jews to kill him—its discovery—his accusation and defence before Felix, Festus, and Agrippa—and his appeal to the emperor, when he saw reason to believe that he would be surrendered to the Jews by the profligate Roman governor, are beautifully told, and are deeply interesting. It will be observed that St. Paul, whenever he is required to give an account of his motives, his religion, or his conduct as a Christian teacher, uniformly appeals to his miraculous conversion, and to the appearance of a great light at mid-day, which was seen by the large multitude which attended him. The part ends with his being committed, as a prisoner, to the custody of the centurion, in consequence of his appeal to Cæsar.

XIV. Few observations are necessary on the fourteenth part, which relates the voyage of St. Paul to Rome, his shipwreck at the island of Melita (probably in the Adriatic), and his arrival in Italy. During his imprisonment at Rome, he wrote his Epistle to the Ephesians, to congratulate them on their admission into the Christian Church, through the mercy of God, which invited them to holiness of life. In the second year of his imprisonment he sent an Epistle to the Philippians, on the usual subject, to caution them against the Judaizing teachers, and persuade them to love and union. The Epistle to the Colossians affirms the doctrine of the atonement of Christ, against the metaphysical Essenians and Judaizers. These Epistles show the constant and peculiar care of the Apostle over the Churches, and his great anxiety to preserve the converts in the purity of the faith. The beautiful Epistle to Philemon displays the singular union of courtesy, kindness, and benevolence, which characterized the Apostle in private life. The first of the Catholic Epistles, that of St. James, was also given to the Churches at this period. The doctrines of St. Paul on justification by faith, without the deeds of the Law of Moses, appear to have been so misinterpreted, as if the Apostle had taught the opinion of salvation without holiness of life. Though the grace and mercy of God are the sole causes of the system of redemption, holiness is the only means by which that redemption may be secured. Holiness is the root of both present and future happiness, and is the one great object of the Gospel. It cannot therefore excite surprise, that the Catholic Epistles should be principally written to enforce these practical duties.

XV. In this last part I have endeavoured to give a brief history of the Christian Church to the present day. The fourteenth part ended with the release of St. Paul from his first imprisonment, and the writing of the Book of the Acts by his companion St. Luke. While the Apostle was waiting in Italy for Timothy, he had the opportunity of calmly considering the state of his countrymen. He observed their hatred towards himself—their contempt towards him as an apostate and deserter of the cause of the Sanhedrin—their inadequate ideas of the Messiah—the approaching ruin of Jerusalem, and the consequent dispersion of his people. Impressed with sorrow for their condition, he made his last, and perhaps his greatest effort, to convince them of the real nature of the spiritual Being whom they ought to expect; as the causer of a greater deliverance than the rescuing of their degraded country from the dominion of Rome. Avoiding all mention of his own offensive name, he wrote his Epistle to the Hebrews, to prove the truth of the doctrines upon which alone Christianity is established, the Divinity and atonement of Christ, who is the Word of God, the personal and manifested Logos of their own Scriptures. The Epistle to the Hebrews may be considered the key to the Old Testament, and the most important of all the Inspired Writings to him who would understand clearly the Scripture doctrine of the person of Christ.

It is not improbable that St. Paul proceeded from Italy to the various places to which he intimated his desire to travel, and to others, which are mentioned in ecclesiastical history as the scenes of his labors. The reasons, upon the authority of which it is believed by many, that he now travelled to Britain, Jerusalem, Antioch, to certain towns in Asia, to Greece, and Rome, will be found in the notes from the second to the twelfth sections.

On his second visit to Rome, the Apostle was again imprisoned, in the general persecution of the Christians under Nero. In the anticipation of approaching death, he wrote his Second Epistle to Timothy. In this letter he takes his farewell of his friend and of the Church, and expresses his joy at the prospect of a painful death, with that humble but well-founded confidence, which is the privilege of a Christian only.

The approaching death of St. Paul, and the near destruction of Jerusalem evidently rendered this the most appropriate period, when the rest of the apostles, who were still alive, might usefully address their general Epistles to the Christian Churches. We are accordingly now presented with the Epistles of St. Peter and St. Jude. The prejudices of the former Apostle against the Gentiles had subsided, and he addresses himself jointly to them, with the Jewish converts, to encourage them to holiness and to patience under suffering. In his Second Epistle he reminds them of the danger of apostacy, and of the end of the Jewish dispensation and the visible world.

About the same time St. Jude writes his Epistle, to guard the converts against every doctrine, however specious it might appear, which tended to diminish the sanctions of holiness. This was the one great object of all religion: and no purity of faith, no zealous attachment to a party, an opinion, or a creed, can be substituted for the indispensable sacrifice of ourselves to God.

The sixteenth section brings us to the martyrdom of St. Peter and St. Paul, the two principal leaders of the army of the Church militant upon earth. It is probable that none of the apostles, except St. John, was now left alive. The appeal of the Spirit of God to the Jews was now terminated. St. Peter had opened the kingdom of heaven to his people; St. Paul had invited and adjured them to enter in—they had refused to accept the invitation; and the wrath came upon them to the uttermost. They wander among us the outcasts of mankind. The contempt of the nations has begun only to subside into pity with the existing generation. For the first time since the fall of Jerusalem, their Christian brethren regard them with uniform benevolence.

The eighteenth section contains the Book of the Revelations. I believe it, with Dr. Clarke, to have been intended to supply the place of a continued succession of prophets in the Christian Church. I have divided it, with some variations, according to the theory of its interpretation, submitted to the world by our latest and most popular commentator, Mr. Faber.

The reader is supposed to have perused the volumes of this learned, though not always satisfactory, hierophant.

The opinion that the apostacy of papal Rome is announced in the Book of Revelations has been long and rightly received among the Churches. Mr. Croly has published some very curious and valuable observations on this point. He is of opinion that the principal portions of the Apocalypse refer exclusively to the corruptions of the Western Church. I subjoin a brief analysis of his ingenious system of interpretation, which is worthy of the attention of the biblical student, for whose advantage this statement is principally designed^z.

^z The System of Interpretation of the Apocalypse, by the Rev. George Croly, A. M. &c.—The Apocalypse is not a consecutive prophecy, but a fasciculus of prophecies, seen probably at intervals, during St. John's dwelling at Patmos, all predicting nearly the same events, under different emblems and modes of expression, and thus checking and illustrating each other. After the first three chapters, addressed to the Asiatic Churches, the predictions are strictly confined to Europe! They take no notice of the Eastern Church, nor of Mahometanism. They are limited to Popery, of which they give a history, regular, close, and circumstantial, in a remarkable degree. Analysis of the Apocalypse.—Chapters 4, 5, 6, 7, (the chapters of the seals,) are a general view, or index, of the events detailed in the subsequent predictions. These chapters comprehend the course of Providence, from the birth of Christianity to the Millennium. Chapters 8, 9, 10, 11, (the chapters of the trumpets,) are identical with chapters 15 and 16, (the chapters of the seals.) They both predict the series of events between the Reformation in the twelfth century, and the great universal war in which Popery is to perish. But the chapters of the trumpets mark the events with much more detail. Thus chapter 8 gives a view of the general, physical, and moral sufferings of man, in consequence of the divine displeasure at the corruptions of Christianity by the popedom. Chapter 9 is a most remarkable and characteristic prediction of the French Revolution. This prediction has been hitherto presumed, by the majority of commentators, to apply to Mahometanism. This is the chapter which Pastorini's, Walmsley's prophecies apply to Luther, and the Reformation in Germany, and on which the Irish Romanists founded their expectation of a massacre of the Protestants in the year 1825. It will be shown that it applies only to our era—that its date is past—and that it is the history of the French Jacobin empire. Chapter 10 is the sudden diffusion of the Holy Scriptures, and synonymous of the French Revolution. Chapter 11 is a history of the suppression of the Holy Scriptures by Popery, of their public extinction by Atheistical and Revolutionary France, and of their sudden recovery from this degradation, by being spread to the boundaries of the globe. Chapters 12, 13, and 14, with 17, 18, and 19, are the peculiar narrative of the Church of Rome, in its rise, progress, and final punishment. Thus, chapter 12 gives a detail of the persecutions of Christianity by Paganism, as embodied with the government of ancient Rome—with the transmission of the spirit of Paganism into the government of modern Rome, displayed in similar persecutions of Christianity. Chapter 13 is a striking prediction of the rise of the combined temporal and spiritual power of Rome. The Reformation under the Waldenses—the fierce vindictiveness of Rome against those early Christians—and the formation of the inquisition for the double purpose of crushing the Reformers, and of raising Popery to universal dominion. Chapter 14 is a prediction of the downfall and extinction of Popery, by means which are yet hidden, but which are palpably connected with some great, brief havoc of man, and the ruin of the government of nations. The intervening chapters, 15 and 16, are the chapters of the seals, and have been already mentioned as synonymous with, and explanatory of, the chapters of the trumpets. The 17th, 18th, and 19th chapters are various details of the mode in which the punishment and extinction of Popery will be accomplished. Of these chapters, of course, it would be presumptuous to attempt any detailed interpretation. They are future, and their satisfactory interpretation must wait for the event. But they all distinctly imply some visitation of Contrary to the usual mode of arrangement, I have placed the Epistles of St. John after the Apocalypse. The difference of the style in the composition was one of my principal arguments for so doing. The language of the Book of Revelations appeared to be the result of less intercourse with the Greeks, than that of the Epistles, which bear much resemblance to the style of St. John's Gospel, the last in date of the Inspired Writings. The powerful recommendations also to love and truth and union among Christians, which abound in the Epistles of St. John, appeared to be a more valuable legacy to the Churches of God than even the prophecies of the Apocalypse. Whether there be prophecies, they shall cease—charity never faileth.

The completion of the Canon of the New Testament having been noticed in the twentieth section, I have concluded the work with a brief review of the history of the Christian Church, from the close of the apostolic age to the present period. One day with our Lord is as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day. Though the fire by night, and the pillar of cloud by day no longer guide the visible Church through the wilderness of this world—He that keepeth his spiritual Israel can neither slumber nor sleep. As surely as He led his people in the olden time from Egypt to Canaan, so certainly will God overrule the evil of our state of trial, and direct the nations of a Christian world to truth and peace, to union and to mutual love. Individual holiness and political happiness must prevail upon earth. The province of this planet shall be reconquered from the power of evil which has so long led it captive. The tree of life will be again planted in the Paradise of earth, and all mankind, renovated in holiness, and serving their Only Great God in spirit and in truth, shall become one religious family of One Merciful Father.

Such are the sublime representations of the plans of Providence which appear to be revealed in Scripture respecting mankind. When we remember the greatness of the Deity, and the mystery of the continuance of evil, they will appear as rational as they are scriptural. They are founded upon the supposition, that evil would not have been permitted, unless greater eventual benefit would be thereby conferred on all accountable beings. By the atonement of Christ alone (the one great truth of Scripture) evil will be conquered, and universal happiness secured. Shadows, clouds, and darkness rest upon the future. We must die, we must rise again with enlarged and renovated faculties, before we can thoroughly comprehend the government of the moral universe, which is thus but partially revealed to us in Scripture. The Revelation, which I have been endeavouring to illustrate, is the beginning of the golden thread, by which we shall be enabled, when we inherit our immortality, to trace the whole labyrinth of the plans of God. The eternal contemplation of our Jehovah, and the perpetual improvement of our reason, as well as our exemption from the possibility of evil, are among the noblest of our anticipated privileges hereafter. The best and greatest of our present priv-the divine wrath rapidly approaching, involving the world in war, of an extent, fierceness, and power of civil and physical ruin, beyond all example, and threatening all but the extinction of the human race; a deluge of war. From the 20th chapter to the end of the Apocalypse are predictions of the period which is to follow the destruction of Popery, as the great criminal and corruptor of the Christian world. (The Millennium, closing in a second brief apostacy, to be distinguished by a sudden display of the power of God, followed by the day of judgment, and the consummation of that system of Providence in this world.) In this view of the Apocalypse, no prediction lower down than the French Revolution is looked upon as a subject for exact interpretation. This Revolution, however, furnishes the key to the Apocalypse, fixing the dates of the numbers 1260 and 666.

ileges is the power of securing the expected happiness of the future, by our right use of the mercies of God in this stage of our existence.

Whatever may be our discoveries of the government of God, or whatever our loftier or more devotional feelings on the perusal of Scripture, yet another point remains to be considered, before we can thoroughly understand the primary meaning of the Sacred Writings. We must never forget, that they were addressed to the ancestors of that wandering people, whose dispersion among the nations is a perpetual visible demonstration of the accomplishment of prophecy, and of the truth of Christianity. Jesus and his apostles were Jews. They conversed with, and lived among, and appealed to, Jews. To have been understood by the people to whom they spoke they must have adopted the idioms, language, proverbs, and modes of speaking then in use. Their conversations would have been filled with allusions to the events, circumstances, manners, modes, customs, &c. of their day. To understand the New Testament thoroughly, therefore, we must endeavour to comprehend the sense in which the language of the Evangelists was understood by the people of their own age; and the requisite explanations can only be afforded by the Jewish writers. The classical writers, in many respects, are of little service. Though the works of Raphelius, and of innumerable others, who have illustrated the New Testament from these beautiful sources of criticism, are abundantly useful, they have not rendered that peculiar and more essential service to sacred literature which has been effected by the students of the talmudical writings. The learned Baptist, Dr. Gill, Schoetgen, Wetstein, Lightfoot, Dru-sius, and others, have contributed much more effectual aid to our right interpretation of Scripture^y. Though the talmuds abound with fables and absurdities—though the follies and conceits with which the Jews, who refused to embrace Christianity, began to crowd their books at the very time when the beautiful day-spring of the New-Testament Scriptures began to scatter the darkness of mankind,—may be considered as the beginning of their predicted judicial blindness, these books still illustrate the language of the Old Testament. They contain many vestiges of the ancient spiritual interpretations^z. They explain the antiquities, allegories, mysteries, traditions, &c. of the Jews, which are alluded to in Scripture. Though they were written at a later period than the books of the New Testament, as I have shown in my concluding note to this work, they were compiled in the apostolic age, or in those which immediately succeeded it, when the traditions of their ancestors were most venerated, and when the storms which desolated the country attached the compilers most fondly to the very words and phrases of their learned rabbis^a.

^a I entreat the attention of the theological student to the preface to Schoetgen’s Horæ He-

Impressed with such considerations, I have sometimes availed myself of these sources of illustration. Though I may appear to have wandered too far from the strict performance of the task which I had assigned myself—the arrangement of the New Testament—I would not refuse myself the pleasure of perusing and incorporating in my notes many of the principal remarks of the learned and laborious Schoetgen. It is indeed to be regretted that the works of this divine are not sufficiently appreciated. He was imbued with the true spirit of theological criticism. Undertaking his work in the fear of God, and with a sincere desire to serve the Church, he never commenced his diligent reading without fervent prayer that his exertions might be useful. Firmly convinced of the inspiration of the New Testament, he had no hypothesis to serve—no theory to defend—no novel nor ingenious paradox to assert. Knowing that some degree of reputation would follow his diligent researches, he guarded himself carefully from vanity and self-conceit; and rejected much of which the benefit was equivocal, lest the reader should imagine he desired only to display his learning. He apologizes for the very appearance of affectation, when his discussions might be thought unnecessarily prolix. Every where acknowledging his obligations to Selden, Wagenseil, Braun, Witsius, Vitranga, Edzard, Lightfoot, and others, he still confesses the possibility of erroneous conclusions, and his utmost care to avoid them. His language is perspicuous rather than elegant; and his great work will ever be esteemed by all who desire to understand fully and satisfactorily the peculiarities of the New Testament. I trust that some theological laborer will soon devote himself to the task of explaining the whole of the Sacred Volume from the same sources, which so much amused and delighted Schoetgen, Selden, Lightfoot, Dru-sius, and Gill.

In selecting notes from these sources an additional interest was unavoidably excited for the wonderful people to whom so much of our Scriptures was addressed. To them many notes are exclusively written. Though various circumstances persuade me, that the mass of the Jewish people is altogether indifferent to the exertions which many benevolent and good men are daily making on their behalf,—though they at present despise, for the most part, the idea of a spiritual Messiah—we who are Christians well know that Palestine is the land of Emmanuel. We know that the Most High so continues to govern the nations of the world, that their power, and wealth, and greatness, whether they arise from good polity, from war, or from commerce, shall all tend to the accomplishment of his prophecies. Of the unfulfilled prophecies of God, the most splendid, the most numerous, and apparently the most easy of execution, are those which relate to the Jews. They will again plant the vine and the olive upon their native hills, and reap their harvests in the valleys of their fathers. The history of the future age must develop the means by which this great event will be effected. We know not whether they will be borne back to Palestine in triumph in the ships of a powerful maritime nation, (and if so, may God grant that England, and not America, nor Russia, nor any other power, may be so honored by the Almighty), or whether in their behalf the age of miracles will return, and a great simultaneous effort be, therefore, made in their favor, on the part of the sovereigns of Europe braicæ, which is now before me; and to Lightfoot's Works, of which a new edition is just completed, as well as to Wetstein's New Testament. The honor of opening to the world the fountains of talmudical learning, I rejoice to say, belongs to one of our own countrymen. To use the quaint expression of Schoetgen, nisi Lightfootus basset, multi non saltassent.

—or whether, by the exertions of pious individuals, the mass of the community will be so leavened that all people shall unite to restore them to the Holy Land. We know not whether they shall obtain their political reëstablishment from the confederated rulers of the great republic of Europe—or by an easier devotion of that wealth, which is daily making them the principal agents of the commerce of nations, purchase the right of the soil from its present feeble and divided possessors—or whether the future agitations and contentions of sovereigns may render it desirable that an important boundary power should be reëstablished in Palestine; and a formal surrender of their territory should be therefore made to their nation; as in times past the policy of Persia restored their ancestors to Jerusalem, in consequence of its defeat by the Greeks; and of the treaty which forbade the Persians to come within a certain distance of the coast—or whether they will be restored to their own now unoccupied, uncultivated, unregarded land, the central spot on earth, where the metropolitical Church of God may be most suitably established^b, and which seems to be waiting till the heir shall resume his claims, by some other way, which is known only to the God of their fathers—all this must be left to that history, which is the only right interpreter of our faith-preserving prophecy. The experience of the past ages may teach us the manner in which the pride and ambition of man pursue their own plans, and are successful, or are defeated, as the God of Christianity may please to appoint for the accomplishment of his own designs.

Greece boasted of Marathon and Thermopylæ—Greece was triumphant and Persia was repulsed. Neither Themistocles nor Miltiades, nor his son, who completed their victories, nor Darius, nor Xerxes, nor his successor, could have believed that their opposite continents were in commotion, and the whole world was agitated, that the poor and despised prophets of Judæa might be proved to have spoken truth; and the walls of Jerusalem be rebuilt after the predicted period of the Babylonish captivity^c. When Cyrus the younger advanced into the plains of Babylon, from the frontiers of Persia, with a well-appointed army of veteran Greeks, who returned to their own country after his unexpected fall, by a retreat which is still commemorated as the most renowned in history, neither Cyrus,

^b Mr. King's remarks upon Palestine, considered as the centre of the millennial empire of Christ upon earth, are highly worthy of notice. "How capable this country is of a more universal intercourse than any other, with all parts of the earth, is most remarkable, and deserves well to be considered, when we read of the numerous prophecies which speak of its future splendor and greatness; when its people shall at length be gathered from all parts of the earth unto which they are scattered, and be restored to their own land. There is no region in the world to which an access from all parts is so open. By means of the Black Sea and the Mediterranean, there is an easy approach from all parts of Europe, from a great part of Africa, from America by means of the Red Sea and the Persian Gulf, and the well-known roads from thence; there is an approach from the rest of Africa, from the East Indies and from the Isles; and, lastly, by means of the Caspian, the lake or sea of Baikall, and the near communication of many great rivers, the approach is facilitated from all the northern parts of Tartary. In short, if a skilful geographer were to sit down to devise the fittest spot on the globe for universal empire, or, rather, a spot where all the great intercourses of human life should universally centre, and from whence the extended effects of universal benevolence and goodwill should flow to all parts of the earth, and where universal and united homage should be paid, with one consent, to the Most High; he would not find another so suited, in all circumstances, as that which is, with emphasis, called the Holy Land. These observations, perhaps, may not deserve great weight, but they ought not to be wholly neglected; especially when it is considered how many passages of Scripture there are which plainly declare, that the time shall at length come, when Zion shall be the joy of the whole earth."—Note to Hymns to the Supreme Being, p. 126. ap. Clearehus, nor Xenophon, could have imagined that they were preparing the way for the accomplishment of the prophecies of God ; by pointing out to the Greeks of a subsequent generation, that when their forces should be united under one head, the kingdom of Persia was at their disposal ; as an obscure Jew had predicted. They could not tell, that one reason why Cyrus could not conquer Persia with an army of the same people who should hereafter subdue it, might be—the prophecy of Daniel, that a Greek alone should become its conqueror.

Rome did not know that its gradual conquests should overspread the world, and the nations should imperceptibly conform to its government ; and then that its factions should be extinguished, and compelled, whatever their republican indignation might be, to submit to one imperial ruler ; in order that the words of the Jewish prophets might be fulfilled, and the world be at peace, when the Messiah should be born. But as we now look back upon these events, and see how the God of Christianity rides in the whirlwinds of war, and directs all the storms of human passions ; so shall the generations which are yet to come look upon the changes in England, which established that Protestantism which is the blessing of mankind—they shall look back upon the revolutions of France, and the opposition of England to infidelity in religion and anarchy in politics, and admire, in the unlimited consequences of the events of the last generation, the accomplishment of the prophecies of God.

Brethren of the house of Israel ! if any such may be induced to listen to a student of your own Scriptures, your rank among nations will still be high and splendid. The God of your fathers has now permitted you, for nearly two thousand years, to wander over the world, an oppressed, an insulted, and a despised people, without a sovereign, a kingdom, or a church. God is a Being unchangeable, and wise, and good. You hold in your hands a collection of books which tell you of the glories of your ancestors—how they were separated from the rest of the world, neither because they were greater, nor wiser, nor better, nor braver, than the rest of men upon whom the rain descended and the sun shone ; but because the love of God elected them, and gave them their laws and institutions, to preserve the memory of His name, amidst the contagion of idolatry ; and to obtain for themselves political power and eminence, as the result of their obedience.

The nations among whom they were planted respected and feared them, so long as they obeyed their Law : they subdued and conquered, and led them into captivity when they forgot their allegiance to Jehovah. The last and longest of their captivities was attended with this good effect ; it extirpated the remnant of that attachment to idolatry which had caused so many sufferings. The reaction from idolatry to faith was such, that when the books of the New Testament were written, the devotion of the Jews to the ritual and ceremonial law was at its height. Idolatry was never named among them without detestation and contempt. The strict observance even of a burthensome traditional law was added to the generally undeviating compliance with the Mosaical institutions ; and the chosen people of God appeared to themselves, and to the heathen, to live in the firm profession and obedience of the most burthensome service, commanded by their inspired legislator. What was the cause, then, that at the very moment when the design of Moses seemed to have been accomplished, the God of Abraham, of Isaac, and of Jacob should give his inheritance to the heathen, and the dead bodies of his servants to the fowls of the air ? Why was your land laid waste, the temple destroyed, your people scattered over the world, at that peculiar period, when your obedience to the minutest of your laws was most perfect ? From the earliest ages your fathers believed that a Divine Being should come upon earth to perform various essential benefits for mankind. This belief was supported by the predictions of the Old Testament. The expectation of a Messiah is the foundation of the whole system. When your observance of your ritual was most exact, your expectation of the Messiah was also most fervid. Yet your nation was afflicted by the dreadful visitation to which I have alluded. Thus your obedience and your faith were at their height, when the greatest desolation came upon you. Some proportionate cause must be assigned for this apparent mystery, and none can be found but that which is related in these books, which we, the Christians, have added to those received by yourselves, upon similar evidences of their inspiration. We receive them as the writings of your countrymen, upon the authority of the miracles which were wrought by their authors—their own internal evidence—the prophecies they contain—and upon all other similar proofs which demonstrate to you the authority of the books of the Old Testament.

Here then we arrive at the question which divides the elder brother from the younger; the Jew from the Christian. In the Inspired Books which the Christian has appended to the Sacred Writings of the Jews, we read of the actions and preaching, the birth, and life, and death of a Being whom we assert to be the predicted Messiah. You rejected this Being because he did not deliver you from the Roman yoke. You demand a temporal, we a spiritual, deliverer. In this lies the difference between us. If a temporal Messiah is the object of the prophecies, He has not come; if a spiritual Messiah is to be expected, Jesus of Nazareth was the Desire of nations.

Though I am largely digressing from our more immediate object, I entreat you to permit me to appeal to you as my fellow-men on this subject. As we are immortal and accountable beings, the soul of man, which lives for ever, is of more value than the body, which must mingle with the elements—the future and eternal state is of higher consideration than the present transitory world—and it is more probable, therefore, that the Great Deliverer who was announced by a long train of prophets, and to whom the attention of mankind should be directed, would be the bestower of some inestimable benefits, which would refer to the soul as well as the body; and to the future as well as the present world. Man is now and has long been the subject of so much misery and evil, that his deliverance from that state, and restoration to happiness in the world to come would probably be the greatest and the worthiest design of the Almighty.

In looking for a temporal Messiah, you anticipate a being fit for earth alone. The Messiah whom we receive was fit for earth and for heaven. Your Messiah is a mere mortal, who must linger through his few years of feverish renown, “pleased with this trifle still, as that before:” ours is an Immortal, who came down from an invisible world to elevate the whole human race, and to restore them to communion with God. Your Messiah is expected to triumph, as a Cæsar or a Napoleon, over the bodies of the slaughtered, amid the groans of the dying, and the tears of the widow and the orphan: ours shall mount to universal dominion by subduing the heart, and by changing the sword into the ploughshare, and banishing tears and grief for ever. Which is more glorious? Yours is compatible with the indulgence of all the lion passions of the heart: ours is only compatible with the conquest of self, with pure motives, and a holy life. Which is more worthy of an Immortal—which yields more praise to God?

I shall be trespassing too much upon the time of the reader if I permit myself to proceed further on this point.

I have not entered at great length into the various controversies which prevail among Christians. Where the subject was unavoidable, I have endeavoured to point out the principles on which both agree ; and by following which, their differences would be more reconciled. This mode of proceeding generally offends both classes ; but I did not wish to become a partisan. In that principal and almost the only great controversy which divides those who unite in believing the scriptural doctrines of the Trinity, the Incarnation, and the Atonement, the question of church government, I have expressed myself in the most decided manner. I have done so because I believe that Christianity is a system of positive institutions ; and that those Christians who would represent Christ our Lord as the Saviour of individuals only have misapprehended the spirit of Christianity. Christ is the Legislator of nations. As the Jews were a nation and a people governed by the laws of God, so was it designed that every nation under heaven should be bound by one law of Christian and national polity. This object was to be effected by our Lord committing to his Church a system of authority, which is alike suited to all forms of civil government. Because the teachers of the people are in all nations the eventual arbiters of the character, the destiny, and the morality of a people ; it pleased God to appoint an order of men, who should judge of the fitness or unfitness of all the teachers of the people ; and who should permit none to become Christian ministers who had departed from the truth which Christ had revealed. To prevent ambition and pride (the principal agitators of governments) from disturbing the Churches, he made these men equal. The apostles were equal among themselves, and they appointed teachers ; and the Christian world never heard at that time of revolts, rebellions, or wars, among Christians. The purity of the apostolic government was preserved among their immediate successors. The union of the Church with the civil power under Constantine perverted Episcopacy, by inducing ambition among the governors of the Churches ; and the usurpations of the bishop of Rome still more deeply injured the spirituality of the visible Church. The Reformation was the æra of new modes of church government, as well as of the overthrow of the corruptions of that apostacy ; and the universal Church has been disgraced, and the world continued in evil, by the shameful and bloody divisions among Christians. These divisions still continue ; but they would not have existed if the institutions of the Great Lawgiver had been observed ; neither will they cease till the great majority of Christians shall revive among them the primitive laws of order and union.

I have not studied to discover new modes of interpretation. At the risk of being considered a compiler, I have freely taken from various works on Scripture, whatever appeared to be suited to my purpose. Though in danger of being esteemed erroneous, I have not hesitated to express a decided opinion on the controverted points I may have found it expedient to discuss. No fear lest I should be considered illiberal, or uncandid, has prevented me from condemning any opinion which is contrary to truth. No hope of pleasing has induced me for one moment to study the popular opinion ; to vary my phrases, to soften my expressions, or in any way to flatter the people. While I have not studied novelty, I have not hesitated to express any new view of a subject which appeared to me desirable. I may use the expressive language of the great author of the Demonstration of the Messiah, “ I do not desire to live longer in this world than whilst I am disposed both to find out the truth and follow it^d. ”

I must apologize for the period of the publication of this book. Though some delay, arising from unavoidable circumstances, has caused me much regret, in other instances it has been willingly indulged. In contemplating the plan of the government of the world, as it is revealed to us in the Scriptures, I seemed to be surveying a more magnificent temple erected to the glory of God than the round unclouded sky, with the sun walking in his brightness. On every side I heard the song of angels, and of the spirits of the just made perfect. Like Adam in Paradise, I listened to the voice of a manifested God ; I conversed with the Evangelists and the Apostles, I walked with them through the avenues of the majestic edifice ; and even now, though their address is ended, “so charming is their voice, that I can think them still speaking, still stand fixed to hear.” Their words are the words of eternal life ; and the intercourse with these priests of the temple, and with their Holy Master, the God of their homage, appeared but the anticipation of that intellectual and spiritual happiness which shall constitute so much of our felicity in a future state. I submit to the reader the completion of the labor of some years with deference, yet with satisfaction and pleasure ; and I rejoice that it has pleased God to grant me the desire and the patience to accomplish a work which should be useful to the Church and to the world.

In the following TABLES, which are designed principally for the Use of Families, the whole of the Sections of this Arrangement are divided in such a manner, that by reading one portion DAILY, the New Testament may be read through TWICE IN A YEAR.

FROM THE BIRTH OF CHRIST TO THE TEMPTATION.

SECTION I.—General Preface.

MARK i. 1.—LUKE i. 1-4.

THE BEGINNING OF THE GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST, "THE SON OF GOD."^a

SECT. I.

¹FORASMUCH^b as many have taken in hand to set forth in order a declaration of those things which are most surely believed among us, ²even as they delivered them unto us, which ^cfrom the beginning were eyewitnesses, and ministers of the ^cword; ³^dit seemed good to me also, having had perfect understanding of all things from the very first, to write unto thee ^ein order, ^fmost excellent ^dTheophilus, ⁴^gthat thou mightest know the certainty of those things, wherein thou hast been instructed.

The Gospel of St. Mark was probably written at Jerusalem, A.D. 44; that of St. Luke in Achaia, A.D. 64.

SECT. II.

JOHN i. 1-18.

¹IN the beginning ^awas the Word, and the Word was ^bwith God, ^cand the Word was God. ²^dThe same was in the beginning with God. ³^eAll things were made by Him; and without Him was not any thing made that was made. ⁴^fIn Him was life; and ^gthe life was the light of men. ⁵And ^hthe light shineth in darkness; and the darkness comprehended it not.

The Gospel of St. John was written at Ephesus, A.D. 97.

⁶ⁱThere was a man sent from God, whose name was John. ⁷^jThe same came for a witness, to bear witness of the Light, that all men through Him might believe. ⁸He was not that Light, but was sent to bear witness of that Light. ⁹^kThat was the true Light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world. ¹⁰He was in the world, and ^lthe world was made by Him, and the world knew Him not. ¹¹^mHe came unto his own, and his own received Him not. ¹²But ⁿas many as received Him, to them gave He ^{*}power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his Name: ¹³^owhich were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God. ¹⁴^pAnd the Word ^qwas made ^rflesh, and dwelt among us, (and ^swe beheld his glory, the glory as of the Only-begotten of the Father,) ^tfull of grace and truth.

¹⁵ "John^f bare witness of Him, and cried, saying, "This was He of whom I spake, "He that cometh after me is preferred before me: "for He was before me!" ¹⁶ And of his ^xfulness have all we received, and grace for grace. ¹⁷ For ^ythe Law was given by Moses, but ^zGrace and ^aTruth came by Jesus Christ. ¹⁸ ^bNo man hath seen God at any time; ^cthe Only-begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father, He hath declared Him.

SECTION III.—Birth of John the Baptist.^s

LUKE i. 5-25.

⁸ And it came to pass, that while he executed the priest's office before God ^ain the order of his course, ⁹according to the custom of the priest's office, his lot was ^eto burn incense when he went into the temple of the Lord; ¹⁰ ^fand the whole multitude of the people were praying without at the time of incense. ¹¹ And there appeared unto him an Angel of the Lord, standing on the right side of ^ethe altar of incense; ¹² And when Zacharias saw him, ^bhe was troubled, and fear fell upon him. ¹³ But the Angel said unto him,—

"Fear not, Zacharias: for thy prayer is heard;
And thy wife Elisabeth shall bear thee a son,
And ⁱthou shalt call his name John.

¹⁴ And thou shalt have joy and gladness;
And ^jmany shall rejoice at his birth.

And ^kshall drink neither wine nor strong drink;

And he shall be filled with the Holy Ghost, ^leven from his mother's womb.

¹⁶ And ^mmany of the children of Israel shall he turn to the Lord their God.

¹⁷ And ⁿhe shall go before Him in the spirit and power of Elias,

To turn the hearts of the fathers to the children,

And the disobedient ^{*}to the wisdom of the just;

To make ready a people prepared for the Lord."

¹⁹ And the Angel answering said unto him, "I am ^pGabriel, that stand in the presence of God; and am sent to speak unto thee, and to show thee these glad tidings. ²⁰ And, behold! ^qthou shalt be dumb, and not able to speak, until the day that these things shall be performed, because thou believest not my words, which shall be fulfilled in their season."

²¹ And the people waited for Zacharias, and marvelled that he tarried so long in the temple. ²² And when he came out, he could not speak unto them: and they perceived that he had seen a vision in the temple: for he beckoned unto them, and remained speechless.

²³ And it came to pass, that, as soon as ^rthe days of his ministration were accomplished, he departed to his own house. ²⁴ And after those days his wife Elisabeth conceived, and hid herself five months, saying, ²⁵ "Thus hath the Lord dealt with me in the days wherein he looked on me, to ^stake away my reproach among men."

SECTION IV.—The Annunciation.^h

LUKE i. 26-38.

²⁶ AND in the sixth month the Angel Gabriel was sent from God unto a city of Galilee, named Nazareth, ²⁷ to a virgin ^aespoused to a man whose name was Joseph, of the house of David; and the virgin's name was Mary. ²⁸ And the Angel came in unto her, and said, "^bHail, thou that art ^{*}Highly Favored! ^cthe Lord is with thee! blessed art thou among women!" ²⁹ And when she saw him, ^dshe was troubled at his saying, and cast in her mind what manner of salutation this should be.ⁱ

³⁰ And the Angel said unto her, "Fear not, Mary: for thou hast found favor with God. ³¹ ^eAnd, behold! thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son, and ^fshalt call his name JESUS. ³² He shall be great, ^gand shall be called the Son of the Highest: and ^hthe Lord God shall give unto Him the throne of his father David: ³³ ⁱand He shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end."

³⁵ And the Angel answered and said unto her, "^jThe Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee: therefore also that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called ^kthe Son of God. ³⁶ And, behold! thy cousin Elisabeth, she hath also conceived a son in her old age: and this is the sixth month with her, who was called barren. ³⁷ For ^lwith God nothing shall be impossible."

SECTION V.—Interview between Mary and Elisabeth.

LUKE i. 39-56.

³⁹ AND Mary arose in those days, and went into the hill country with haste, ^ainto a city of Juda.^k ⁴⁰ And entered into the house of Zacharias, and saluted Elisabeth. ⁴¹ And it came to pass, that, when Elisabeth heard the salutation of Mary, the babe leaped^l in her womb; and Elisabeth was filled with the Holy Ghost, ⁴² and she spake out with a loud voice, and said,—

"^bBlessed art thou among women! and blessed is the fruit of thy womb! ⁴³ And whence is this to me, that the mother of my Lord should come to me? ⁴⁴ For, lo! as soon as the voice of thy salutation sounded in mine ears, the babe leaped in my womb for joy. ⁴⁵ And blessed is she ^{*}that believed: for there shall be a performance of those things which were told her from the Lord."

⁴⁶ And Mary said,—

"My^c soul doth magnify the Lord,

⁴⁷ And my spirit hath rejoiced in God my Saviour;

⁴⁸ For ^dHe hath regarded the low estate of his handmaiden.

For, behold! from henceforth ^eall generations shall call me blessed;

⁴⁹ For He that is mighty^f hath done to me great things,

And ^gholy is his name;

⁵⁰ And ^hhis mercy is on them that fear Him

From generation to generation.

⁵¹ Heⁱ hath showed strength with his arm;

He^j hath scattered the proud in the imagination of their hearts.

⁵² He^k hath put down the mighty^l from their seats,

SECTION VI.—The Birth and Naming of John the Baptist.

LUKE i. 57, to the end.

57 Now Elisabeth's full time came that she should be delivered; and she brought forth a son. 58 And her neighbours and her cousins heard how the Lord had showed great mercy upon her; and they rejoiced with her.

59 And it came to pass, that^b on the eighth day they came to circumcise the child; and they called him Zacharias, after the name of his father.

60 And his mother answered and said, “Not so; but he shall be called John.” 61 And they said unto her, “There is none of thy kindred that is called by this name.” 62 And they made signs to his father, how he would have him called. 63 And he asked for a writing table, and wrote, saying, “His name is John.” And they marvelled all. 64 And his mouth was opened immediately, and his tongue loosed, and he spake, and praised God. 65 And fear came on all that dwelt round about them: and all these^{*} sayings were noised abroad throughout all^f the hill country of Judæa. 66 And all they that heard them^g laid them up in their hearts, saying, “What manner of child shall this be!” And^h the hand of the Lord was with him.

67 And his father Zachariasⁱ was filled with the Holy Ghost, and prophesied, saying,— 68 Blessed^j be the Lord God of Israel;

For^k He hath visited and redeemed his people,

69 And^l hath raised up an^m Horn of Salvation for us

In the house of his servant David,

70 (Asⁿ He spake by the mouth of his holy Prophets Which have been since the world began),

71 That we should be saved from our enemies,

And from the hand of all that hate us:

72 To^o perform the mercy promised to our fathers,

And to remember his holy covenant;

73 The^p oath which he sware to our father Abraham,

74 That he would grant unto us,

That we, being delivered out of the hand of our enemies, might^q serve Him without fear,”

75 In^r holiness and righteousness before Him, all the days of our [life].

76 And thou, child, shalt be called the Prophet of the Highest:

For^s thou shalt go before the face of the Lord to prepare his ways;

77 To give knowledge of salvation unto his people,

*By the remission of their sins 78 through the†tender mercy of our God;

Whereby the‡dayspring from on high hath visited us,

79 To^t give light to them that sit in darkness and in the shadow of death,

To guide our feet into the way of peace.”

80 And “the child grew, and waxed strong in spirit; and^u was in the deserts till the day of his showing unto Israel.

SECTION VII.—*An Angel appears to Joseph.*MATT. i. 18, to the end.

¹⁸ Now the "birth of Jesus Christ was on this wise. When as his mother Mary was espoused to Joseph, before they came together,^o she was found with child ^bof the Holy Ghost. ¹⁹ Then Joseph her husband, ^cbeing a just man, and not willing ^dto make her a public example, was minded to put her away privily. ²⁰ But while he thought on these things, behold! the Angel of the Lord appeared unto him in a dream,^p saying, "Joseph, thou son of David, fear not to take unto thee Mary thy wife; ^efor that which is ^{*}conceived in her is of the Holy Ghost; ²¹ ^fand she shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name †JESUS, for ^ghe shall save his people from their sins."^q ²² (Now all this was done, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet,^r saying,—

²³ "Behold!^h a virgin shall be with child,
And shall bring forth a son,
And †they shall call his name EMMANUEL,
Which being interpreted is, GOD WITH US.")

²⁴ Then Joseph being raised from sleep did as the Angel of the Lord had bidden him; and took unto him his wife,²⁵ and knew her not till she had brought forth ⁱher firstborn son, and he called his name JESUS.

SECTION X.—The Angels appear to the Shepherds.^b

LUKE ii. 8-20.

⁸ AND there were in the same country shepherds abiding in the field, keeping ^{*}watch over their flock by night. ⁹ And, lo! the Angel of the Lord came upon them, and the glory of the Lord shone round about them: ^aand they were sore afraid. ¹⁰ And the Angel said unto them, "Fear not: for, behold! the city of David, ^aa Saviour, ^ewhich is Christ the Lord. ¹² And this shall be a sign unto you; Ye shall find the babe wrapped in swaddling clothes, lying in a manger.” ¹³ ^fAnd suddenly there was with the Angel a multitude of the heavenly host, praising God, and saying,—

Good ⁱwill toward men!”

¹⁵ And it came to pass, as the Angels were gone away from them into heaven, ^{*}the shepherds said one to another, “Let us now go even unto Bethlehem, and see this thing which is come to pass, which the Lord hath made known unto us.” ¹⁶ And they came with haste, and found Mary, and Joseph, and the babe lying in a manger. ¹⁷ And when they had seen it, they made known abroad the saying which was told them concerning this child. ¹⁸ And all they that heard it wondered at those things which were told them by the shepherds. ¹⁹ ^jBut Mary kept all these things, and pondered them in her heart. ²⁰ And the shepherds returned, glorifying and praising God for all the things that they had heard and seen, as it was told unto them.

²² AND when ^athe days of her purification, according to the Law of Moses were accomplished, they brought him to Jerusalem, to present him to the Lord; ²³ (as it is written in the Law of the Lord, “^bEvery male that openeth the womb shall be called holy to the Lord;”) ²⁴ and to offer a sacrifice according to ^cthat which is said in the Law of the Lord, “A pair of turtledoves, or two young pigeons.” ^d

²⁵ And, behold! there was a man in Jerusalem, whose name was Simeon; and the same man was just and devout, ^awaiting for the ^eConsolation of Israel, and the Holy Ghost was upon him; ²⁶ and it was revealed unto him by the Holy Ghost, that he should not ^fsee death, before he had seen the Lord’s Christ.^e ²⁷ And he came ^gby the Spirit into the temple: and when the parents brought in the child Jesus, to do for him after the custom of the Law, ²⁸ then took he him up in his arms, and blessed God, and said,—

³² A ^kLight to lighten the Gentiles,

⁷ Then Herod, when he had privily called the wise men, inquired of them diligently what time the star appeared; ⁸ and he sent them to Bethlehem, and said, “Go and search diligently for the young child; and when ye have found him, bring me word again, that I may come and worship him also.” ⁹ When they had heard the king, they departed; and, lo! the star, which they saw in the East, went before them, till it came and stood over where the young child was. ^k ¹⁰ When they saw the star, they rejoiced with exceeding great joy; ¹¹ and when they were come into the house, they saw the young child with Mary his mother, and fell down, and worshipped him: and when they had opened their treasures, ^k they ^{*}presented unto him gifts; gold, and frankincense, and myrrh. ¹² And being warned ^l of God ^l in a dream that they should not return to Herod, they departed into their own country another way.

JOHN i. 19-34.

^a ¹⁹ AND this is "the record of John, when the Jews sent priests and Levites from Jerusalem to ask him, "Who art thou?" ²⁰ And ^bhe confessed, and denied not; but confessed, "I am not the Christ." ²¹ And they asked him, "What then? Art thou ^cElias?" And he saith, "I am not." "Art thou ^{*}that Prophet?" And he answered, "No." ²² Then said they unto him, "Who art thou? that we may give an answer to them that sent us. What sayest thou of thyself?" ²³ ^aHe said, "I am the voice of one crying in the wilderness, 'Make straight the way of the LORD!' as ^csaid the Prophet Esaias." ²⁴ And they which were sent were of the Pharisees. ²⁵ And they asked him, and said unto him, "Why baptizest ^bthou then, if thou be not that Christ, nor Elias, neither that Prophet?" ²⁶ John answered them, saying, "I baptize with water: ^ebut there standeth One among you, whom ye know not; ²⁷ ^bHe it is, who coming after me is preferred before me; whose shoe's latchet I am not worthy to unloose." ²⁸ These things were done ⁱin Bethabara ^cbeyond Jordan, where John was baptizing.

²⁹ The next day [John] seeth Jesus coming unto him, and saith, "Behold ^jthe Lamb of God, ^kwhich ^{*}taketh away the sin of the ^dworld!" ³⁰ "This is He of whom I said, ^e'After me cometh a Man which is preferred before me:' for He was before me. ³¹ And I knew Him ^fnot: but that He should be made manifest to ^mIsrael, therefore am I come baptizing with water." ³² ⁿAnd John bare record, saying, "I saw the Spirit descending from heaven like a dove, and it abode upon Him. ³³ And I knew Him not: but He that sent me to baptize with water, the same said unto me, 'Upon whom thou shalt see the Spirit descending, and remaining on Him, ^othe same is He which baptizeth with the Holy Ghost.' ³⁴ And I saw, and bare record that this is ^pthe Son of God."

¹ AND the third day^l there was a marriage in ‘ Cana of Galilee ; and the mother of Jesus was there. ² And both Jesus was called, and his disciples, to the marriage. ³ And when they wanted wine, the mother of Jesus saith unto him, “ They have no wine.” ⁴ Jesus saith unto her, “ ^b Woman, ‘ what have I to do with thee ? ^d mine hour is not yet come.” ⁵ His mother saith unto the servants, “ Whatsoever He saith unto you, do it.” ⁶ And there were set there six waterpots of stone, ‘ after the manner of the purifying of the Jews, containing two or three firkins apiece. ⁷ Jesus saith unto them, “ Fill the waterpots with water.” And they filled them up to the brim. ⁸ And He saith unto them, “ Draw out now, and bear unto the governor of the feast.” And they bare it. ⁹ When the ruler of the feast had tasted ‘ the water that was made wine, and knew not whence it was, (but the servants which drew the water knew,) the governor of the feast called the bridegroom, ¹⁰ and saith unto him, “ Every man at the beginning doth set forth good wine ; and when men have well drunk, then that which is worse ; but thou hast kept the good wine until now.” ¹¹ This beginning of miracles did Jesus in Cana of Galilee, ^e and manifested forth his glory ; and his disciples believed on him.”^m

JOHN ii. 13, to the end.

and doves, and the changers of money sitting. ¹⁵ And when he had made a scourge of small cords, he drove them all out of the temple, and the sheep, and the oxen; and poured out the changers' money, and overthrew the tables; ¹⁶ and said unto them that sold doves, "Take these things hence! make not 'my Father's house a house of merchandise.'" ¹⁷ And his disciples remembered that it was written, "^dThe zeal of thine house hath eaten me up."

¹⁸ Then answered the Jews and said unto him, "'What sign showest thou unto us, seeing that thou doest these things?"' ¹⁹ Jesus answered and said unto them, "'Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up.'" ²⁰ Then said the Jews, "Forty and six years was this temple in building, and wilt thou rear it up in three days?" ²¹ But he spake ^eof the temple of his body. ²² When therefore he was risen from the dead, ^fhis disciples remembered that he had said this unto them; and they believed the Scripture, and the word which Jesus had said.

²³ Now when he was in Jerusalem at the Passover, in the feast day, many believed in his name, when they saw the miracles which he did. ²⁴ But Jesus did not commit himself unto them, because he knew all men, ²⁵ and needed not that any should testify of man: for ^ghe knew what was in man.

Samaria.

¹ WHEN therefore the Lord knew how the Pharisees had heard that Jesus made and ^abaptized more disciples than John, ² (though Jesus himself baptized^e not, but his disciples,) ³ he left Judæa, and departed again into Galilee. ⁴ And he must needs go through Samaria. ⁵ Then cometh he to a city of Samaria, which is called Sychar, near to the parcel of ground ^bthat Jacob gave to his son Joseph.^f ⁶ Now Jacob’s well was there. Jesus therefore, being wearied with his journey, sat thus on the well: and it was about the sixth hour. ⁷ There cometh a woman of Samaria to draw water: Jesus saith unto her, “Give me to drink.” ⁸ (For his disciples were gone away unto the city to buy meat.)

⁹ Then saith the woman of Samaria unto him, “How is it that

- thou, being a Jew, askest drink of me, which am a woman of Samaria?" (For 'the Jews have no dealings with the Samaritans.)
- ^c 2 Kings 17. 24. Luke 9. 52, 53. Acts 10. 23. ¹⁰ Jesus answered and said unto her, "If thou knewest the gift of God, and who it is that saith to thee, Give me to drink; thou wouldest have asked of him, and he would have given thee ^dliving water."

Zech. 13. 1. & 14. 8. ¹¹ The woman saith unto him, "Sir, thou hast nothing to draw with, and the well is deep: from whence then hast thou that living water?" ¹² Art thou greater than our father Jacob, which gave us the well, and drank thereof himself, and his children, and his cattle?"
- ^e ch. 6. 35, 53. ¹³ Jesus answered and said unto her, "Whosoever drinketh of this water shall thirst again: ¹⁴ but 'whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him ^fshall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life."
- ^g See ch. 6. 34. & 17. 2, 3. Rom. 6. 23. 1 John 5. 20. ¹⁵ The ^gwoman saith unto him, "Sir, give me this water, that I thirst not, neither come hither to draw."
- ¹⁶ Jesus saith unto her, "Go, call thy husband, and come hither."
¹⁷ The woman answered and said, "I have no husband."
Jesus said unto her, "Thou hast well said, 'I have no husband.'
¹⁸ For thou hast had five husbands; and he whom thou now hast is not thy husband: in that saidst thou truly."
- ^h Luke 7. 16. & 24. 19. ch. 6. 14. & 7. 40. ¹⁹ The woman saith unto him, "Sir, ^hI perceive that thou art a prophet. ²⁰ Our fathers worshipped ⁱin ^jthis mountain; and ye say, that in ^kJerusalem is the place where men ought to worship."
²¹ Jesus saith unto her, "Woman, believe me, the hour cometh, ^lwhen ye shall neither in this mountain, nor yet at Jerusalem, worship the Father. ²² Ye worship ^mye know not what: we know what we worship: for ⁿsalvation is of the Jews. ²³ But the hour cometh, and now is, when the true worshippers shall worship the Father in ^ospirit ^pand in truth: for the Father seeketh such to worship Him. ²⁴ ^qGod is a Spirit: and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth."
- ²⁵ The woman saith unto him, "I know that MESSIAS^h cometh (which is called Christ): when He is come, 'He will tell us all things.'
²⁶ Jesus saith unto her, "I that speak unto thee am He."
²⁷ And upon this came his disciples, and marvelled that he talked with the woman. Yet no man said, What seekest thou? or, Why talkest thou with her? ²⁸ The woman then left her waterpot, and went her way into the city, and saith to the men, ²⁹ "Come, see a man, ^twhich told me all things that ever I did: is not this the Christ?"
³¹ In the meanwhile his disciples prayed him, saying, "Master, eat."
- ³⁹ And many of the Samaritans of that city believed on Him ^zfor the saying of the woman, which testified, "He told me all that ever I did." ⁴⁰ So when the Samaritans were come unto him, they besought him that he would tarry with them: and he abode there two days. ⁴¹ And many more believed, because of his own word. ⁴² And said unto the woman, "Now we believe, not because of thy saying; for ^y we have heard him ourselves, and know that this is indeed the Christ, the Saviour of the world." ^y ch. 17. 8. 1 John 4. 14.

SECTION III.—Second Miracle at Cana, in Galilee.^k

JOHN iv. 43, to the end.

⁴³ Now after two days he departed thence, and went into Galilee. ⁴⁴ For "Jesus himself testified, that a prophet hath no honor in his own country. ⁴⁵ Then, when he was come into Galilee, the Galileans received him, ^b having seen all the things that he did at Jerusalem at the feast: ^c for they also went unto the feast.

⁴⁶ So [Jesus] came again into Cana of Galilee, where ^d he made the water wine.¹ And there was a certain ^e nobleman, whose son was sick at Capernaum. ⁴⁷ When he heard that Jesus was come out of Judæa into Galilee, he went unto him, and besought him that he would come down, and heal his son; for he was at the point of death. ⁴⁸ Then said Jesus unto him, "^f Except ye see signs and wonders, ye will not believe." ⁴⁹ The nobleman saith unto him, "Sir, come down ere my child die." ⁵⁰ Jesus saith unto him, "Go thy way; thy son liveth." And the man believed the word that Jesus had spoken unto him, and he went his way. ⁵¹ And as he was now going down, his servants met him, and told him, saying, "Thy son liveth." ⁵² Then inquired he of them the hour when he began to amend. And they said unto him, "Yesterday at the seventh hour the fever left him." ⁵³ So the father knew that it was at the same hour, in the which Jesus said unto him, "Thy son liveth." And himself believed, and his whole house. ⁵⁴ This is again the second miracle that Jesus did, when he was come out of Judæa into Galilee.

⁴ Now when he had left speaking, he said unto Simon, "Launch out into the deep, and let down your nets for a draught." ⁵ And Simon answering said unto him, "Master, we have toiled all the night, and have taken nothing: nevertheless at thy word I will let down the net." ⁶ And when they had this done, they enclosed a great multitude of fishes: and their net brake, ⁷ and they beckoned unto their partners, which were in the ^h other ship, that they should come and help them; and they came, and filled both the ships, so that they began to sink. ⁸ When Simon Peter saw it, he fell down at Jesus' knees, saying, "^g Depart from me, for I am a sinful man, O Lord!" ⁹ For he was astonished, and all that were with him, at the draught of the fishes which they had taken; ¹⁰ and so were also James, and John, the sons of Zebedee, which were partners with Simon. And Jesus said unto Simon, "Fear not; ^h from henceforth thou shalt catch men." ¹¹ And when they had brought their ships to land, ⁱ they forsook all, and followed him.

¹⁶ AND therefore did the Jews persecute Jesus, and sought to slay him, because he had done these things on the Sabbath day. ¹⁷ But Jesus answered them, “^aMy Fatherⁱ worketh hitherto, and I work.” ¹⁸ Therefore the Jews ^bsought the more to kill him, because he not only had broken the Sabbath, but said also that God was his [own] Father, ^cmaking himself equal with God. ¹⁹ Then answered Jesus and said unto them, “Verily, verily, I say unto you, ^dThe Son can do nothing of himself, but what he seeth the Father do; for what things soever He doeth, these also doeth the Son likewise. ²⁰ For ^ethe Father loveth the Son, and showeth him all things that Himself doeth: and he will show him greater works than these, that ye may marvel. ²¹ For as the Father raiseth up the dead, and quickeneth them; ^feven so the Son quickeneth whom he will. ²² For the Father judgeth no man, but ^ghath committed all judgment unto the Son; ²³ that all men should honor the Son, even as they honor the Father. ^hHe that honoreth not the Son honoreth not the Father which hath sent him.

24 Verily, verily, I say unto you, ⁱHe that heareth my word, and believeth on Him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation; ^jbut is passed from death unto life. 25 Verily, verily, I say unto you, The hour is coming, and now is, when ^kthe dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God: and they that hear shall live. 26 For as the Father hath life in Himself; so hath He given to the Son to have life in himself. 27 And ^lhath given him authority to execute judgment also, ^mbecause he is the Son of Man. 28 Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, ⁿand ^oshall come forth; ^pthey that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation. 30 ^qI ^rcan of mine own self do nothing. As I hear, I judge: and my judgment is just; because ^sI seek not mine own will, but the will of [the Father] which hath sent me. 31 ^tIf I bear witness of myself, my witness is not true. 32 ^uThere is Another that beareth witness of me; and I know that the witness which He witnesseth of me is true.

 lost his savour, wherewith shall it be salted? it is thenceforth good for nothing, but to be cast out, and to be trodden under foot of men.
 14 Ye ^ware the light of the world.^y A city that is set on a hill cannot be hid. ¹⁵ Neither do men ^xlight a candle, and put it under a ^{*}bushel, but on a candlestick; and it giveth light unto all that are in the house.
 16 Let your light so shine before men, ^ythat they may see your good works, and ^zglorify your Father which is in heaven.
 17 "Think ^anot that I am come to destroy the Law, or the Prophets: I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil. ¹⁸ For verily I say unto you, ^btill heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the Law, till all be fulfilled. ¹⁹ Whosoever ^ctherefore shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so, he shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven; but whosoever shall do and teach them, the same shall be called great in the kingdom of heaven. ²⁰ For I say unto you, That except your righteousness shall exceed ^dthe righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven.
 21 "Ye have heard that it was said ^{*}by them of old time, 'Thou shalt not kill; and whosoever shall kill shall be in danger of the Judgment.' ²² But I say unto you, That ^ewhosoever is angry with his brother without a cause shall be in danger of the Judgment: and whosoever shall say to his brother, ^fRaca! shall be in danger of the Council: but whosoever shall say, Thou fool! shall be in danger of hell fire.^z ²³ Therefore, ^hif thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath aught against thee; ²⁴ leave ⁱthere thy gift before the altar, and go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come, and offer thy^a gift. ²⁵ ^jAgree with thine adversary quickly, ^kwhiles thou art in the way with him; lest at any time the adversary deliver thee to the judge, and the judge deliver thee to the officer, and thou be cast into prison.
 26 Verily I say unto thee, thou shalt by no means come out thence, till thou hast paid the uttermost farthing.
 27 "Ye have heard that it was said [^{*}by them of old time,] 'Thou shalt not commit adultery.' ²⁸ But I say unto you, that whosoever ^mlooketh on a woman, to lust after her, hath committed adultery with her already in his heart. ²⁹ And ⁿif thy right eye [†]offend thee, ^opluck it out, and cast it from thee: for it is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish, and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell. ³⁰ And if thy right hand offend thee, cut it off, and cast it from thee: for it is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish, and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell.
 31 It hath been said, 'Whosoever ^pshall put away his wife, let him give her a writing of divorcement.' ³² But I say unto you, 'That whosoever shall put away his wife, saving for the cause of fornication, causeth her to commit adultery: and whosoever shall marry her that is divorced committeth adultery.
 33 "Again, Ye have heard ^rthat it hath been said by them of old time, 'Thou ^sshalt not forswear thyself, but ^tshalt perform unto the Lord thine oaths.' ³⁴ But I say unto you, "Swear not at all; neither by heaven; for it is ^uGod's throne: ³⁵ nor by the earth; for it is his footstool: neither by Jerusalem; for it is ^vthe city of the Great King. ³⁶ Neither shalt thou swear by thy head, because thou canst not make one hair white or black. ³⁷ But ^alet your communication be, Yea, yea ; Nay, nay : for whatsoever is more than these cometh of evil.

³⁸ “ Ye have heard that it hath been said, ‘ An ^yeye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth.’ ³⁹ But I say unto you, ^zThat ye resist not evil ; ^abut whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also ; ⁴⁰ and if any man will sue thee at the law, and take away thy coat, let him have thy cloak also : ⁴¹ and whosoever ^bshall compel thee to go a mile, go with him twain. ⁴² Give to him that asketh thee, and ^cfrom him that would borrow of thee turn not thou away : ¹ and of ¹ Luke vi. 30. him that taketh away thy goods ask them not again. ² Luke vi. 31. ² And ^das ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise.

³ Matt. v. 44. ³ “ Ye have heard that it hath been said, ‘ Thou ^eshalt love thy neighbour, and ^fhate thine enemy.’ ⁴ But ^gI say unto you, which hear, Love your enemies ; do good to them which hate you ; bless them that curse you ; and pray ^hfor them which despitefully use you : ⁵ that ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven ; for ⁱHe maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good ; and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust. ⁶ For if ye love them which love you, what reward have ye ? ⁷ for sinners also love those that love them : ⁸ do not even the Publicans the same ? ⁹ And if ye salute your brethren only, what do ye more than others ? do not even the Publicans so ? ¹⁰ And if ye do good to them which do good to you, what thank have ye ? for sinners also do even the same. ¹¹ And ^jif ye lend to them of whom ye hope to receive, what thank have ye ? for sinners also lend to sinners, to receive as much again. ¹² But ^klove ye your enemies, and do good, and ^llend, hoping for nothing again ; and your reward shall be great, and ^mye shall be the children of the Highest : for He is kind unto the unthankful, and to the evil. ¹³ Be ye therefore merciful, ¹⁴ be ⁿye therefore perfect, even ^oas your Father which is in heaven is ¹⁵ merciful, [and] ¹⁶ perfect.

⁵ “ And when thou prayest, thou shalt not be as the hypocrites are : for they love to pray standing in the synagogues and in the corners of the streets, that they may be seen of men. Verily I say unto you, They have their reward. ⁶ But thou, when thou prayest, ^uenter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret ; and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly. ⁷ But when ye pray, ^vuse not vain repetitions, as the heathen do ; for they think that they shall be heard for their much speaking. ⁸ Be not ye therefore like unto them. For your Father knoweth what things ye have need of, before ye ask Him. ⁹ After this manner therefore pray ye :—“ Our Father which art in heaven, ^whallowed be thy name : ^xthy kingdom come : ^ythy will be done in earth, ^zas it is in heaven : ¹¹ give us this day our ^{aa}daily bread : ¹² and

Is not the life more than meat, and the body than raiment? ²⁶ Behold ^mthe fowls of the air: for they sow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns; yet your heavenly Father feedeth them. Are ye not much better than they? ²⁷ Which of you, by taking thought, can add one cubit unto his stature? ²⁸ And why take ye thought for raiment? Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin: ²⁹ and yet I say unto you, That even Solomon, in all his glory, was not arrayed like one of these. ³⁰ Wherefore, if God so clothe the grass of the field, which to-day is, and to-morrow is cast into the oven, shall he not much more clothe you, O ye of little faith? ³¹ Therefore take no thought, saying, What shall we eat? or, What shall we drink? or, Wherewithal shall we be clothed? ³² For after all these things do the Gentiles seek. For your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things. ³³ But ⁿseek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you. ³⁴ Take therefore no thought for the morrow; for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself. ⁸ "And ⁹ why call ye me, Lord! Lord! and do not the things which I say? ⁹ Not every one that saith unto me, 'Lord! Lord! shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven. ¹⁰ Many will say to me in that day, Lord! Lord! have we ¹¹ not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works? ¹¹ And ¹² then will I profess unto them, I never knew you: ¹² depart from me, ye that work iniquity!

¹² "Therefore, whosoever heareth, ¹³ cometh to me, and heareth ¹⁴ these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will ¹⁵ show you to whom he is like. ¹⁶ He is like ¹⁷ unto a wise man, which built his house, ¹⁸ and digged deep, and laid the foundation on a rock. And when ¹⁹ the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, ²⁰ the stream beat vehemently upon that house, and could not shake it; ²¹ and it fell not, for it was founded upon a rock.

- ³⁸ Then ^q'certain of the Scribes and of the Pharisees answered, saying, "Master, we would see a sign from thee." ³⁹ But he answered and said to them, "An evil and ^radulterous generation seeketh after a sign ! and there shall no sign be given to it, but the sign of the Prophet Jonas. ⁴⁰ For ^sas Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly ; so shall ^t'the Son of Man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth. ⁴¹ The ^u'men of Nineveh shall rise in judgment with this generation, and ^v'shall condemn it : ^wbecause they repented at the preaching of Jonas ; and, behold ! a greater than Jonas is here ! ⁴² The ^x'Queen of the South shall rise up in the judgment with this generation, and shall condemn it : for she came from the uttermost parts of the earth to hear the wisdom of Solomon ; and, behold ! a greater than Solomon is here !

Even so shall it be also unto this wicked generation.

these are they by the wayside, where the word is sown; but when they have heard, Satan cometh—and taketh away—that was sown in their hearts. 16 And these are they likewise which are sown on stony ground ; who, when they have heard the word — 17 and have no root in themselves, and so endure but for a time — or persecution ariseth for the word's sake, immediately they are offended. 18 And these are they which are sown among thorns ; such as hear the word, 19 — of this world, and the deceitfulness of riches, and the lust of other things entering in, choke the word, and it becometh unfruitful. 20 And these are they which are sown on good ground ; such as hear the word, — and bring forth fruit, some thirtyfold, some sixty, and some an hundred. 21 — Is a candle brought to be put under a *bushel, or under a bed ? and not to be set on a candlestick ? 22 For there is nothing hid, which shall not be manifested ; neither was any thing kept secret, but that it should come abroad."

MATT. xiii. 24–53.—MARK iv. 26–34.

Mark iv. 26–29. 26 AND he said, "So is the kingdom of God, as if a man should cast seed into the ground ; 27 and should sleep, and rise night and day, and the seed should spring and grow up, he knoweth not how. 28 For the earth bringeth forth fruit of herself ; first the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear. 29 But when the fruit is ^{*}brought forth, immediately ^ahe putteth in the sickle, because the harvest is come."

Matt. xiii. 24–30. 24 Another parable put he forth unto them, saying, "The kingdom of heaven is likened unto a man which sowed good seed in his field. 25 But while men slept, his enemy came and sowed tares among the wheat, and went his way. 26 But when the blade was sprung up, and brought forth fruit, then appeared the tares also. 27 So the servants of the householder came, and said unto him, 'Sir, didst not thou sow good seed in thy field ? from whence then hath it tares ?' 28 He said unto them, 'An enemy hath done this.' The servants said unto him, 'Wilt thou then that we go and gather them up ?' 29 But he said, 'Nay ; lest while ye gather up the tares, ye root up also the wheat with them. 30 Let both grow together until the harvest : and in the time of harvest I will say to the reapers, Gather ye together first the tares, and bind them in bundles to burn them : but ^bgather the wheat into my barn.'"

¹ AND they came over unto the other side of the sea, into the country of the Gadarenes—² the country of the Gergesenes—³ which is over against Galilee. ⁴ And when he was come out of the ship, immediately there met him out of the tombs, ⁵ out of the city, a certain man, ⁶ possessed with devils, coming out of the tombs, ⁷ which had devils a long time, and ware no clothes, neither abode in any house, but ⁸ who had his dwelling among the tombs; and no man could bind him, no, not with chains; ⁹ because that he had been often bound with fetters and chains, and the chains had been plucked asunder by him, and the fetters broken in pieces; neither could any man tame him; ¹⁰ and always, night and day, he was in the mountains, and in the tombs, crying, and cutting himself with stones; ¹¹ exceeding fierce, so that no man might pass by that way. ¹² And, behold! ¹³ when he saw Jesus afar off, he ran, ¹⁴ and fell down before him, ¹⁵ and worshipped him, ¹⁶ and cried with a loud voice, and said, “What have I to do with thee, Jesus, thou ^aSon of the Most High God? ¹⁷ Art thou come hither to torment us before the time? ¹⁸ I beseech thee, ¹⁹ I adjure thee by God, that thou torment me not!” ²⁰ (For he had commanded the unclean spirit to come out of the man. ²¹ For he said unto him, “Come out of the man, thou unclean spirit.” ²² For oftentimes it had caught him: and he was kept bound with chains and in fetters; and he brake the bands, and was driven of the devil into the wilderness.) ²³ And he asked him, “What is thy name?” And he answered, saying, “My name is Legion: for we are many.” ²⁴ (Because many devils were entered into him.) ²⁵ And he besought him much, that he would not send them away out of the country; ²⁶ that he would not command them to go out ^binto the deep.

SECTION XXXVIII.—Jairus's Daughter is healed, and the infirm Woman.^b

MATT. ix. 1. and 18–26.—MARK v. 21, to the end.—LUKE viii. 40, to the end.

¹ AND it came to pass, that, ² when Jesus was passed ¹ Luke viii. 40. over again by ship unto the other side, ³ he ^acame into his ² Mark v. 21. own city; [and] ⁴ when Jesus was returned, the people ³ Matt. ix. 1. ⁴ Luke viii. 40. ⁵ Mark v. 21. ⁶ Luke viii. 40. ⁷ Mark v. 21, 22. ⁶ for they were all waiting for him, ⁷ and he was nigh unto the sea.

^b And ⁸ while he spake these things unto them, ⁹ behold! ⁸ Matt. ix. 18. there cometh one of the rulers of the synagogue, Jairus by ⁹ Mark v. 22. name; and when he saw him, he fell at his feet, ¹⁰ down ¹⁰ Luke viii. 41. at Jesus' feet, and besought him, ¹¹ and worshipped him, ¹¹ Matt. ix. 18. ¹² and besought him greatly, ¹³ that he would come into his ¹² Mark v. 23. house: ¹⁴ saying, "My little daughter lieth at the point of ¹³ Luke viii. 41. death: I pray thee, come and lay thy hands on her, that ¹⁴ Mark v. 23.

¹⁵ Luke viii. 42. she may be healed; and she shall live.” ¹⁵ (For he had one only daughter, about twelve years of age, and she lay a dying.) ¹⁶ And Jesus arose, ¹⁷ and Jesus went with him; and ¹⁸ so did his disciples. ¹⁹ But as he went, the people thronged him; ²⁰ much people followed him, and thronged him.

²¹ And, ²² behold! ²³ a certain woman, ²⁴ which was diseased, ²⁵ which ^c had an issue of blood twelve years, ²⁶ and had suffered many things of many physicians, and had spent all that she had ²⁷ upon physicians, neither could be healed of any, ²⁸ and was nothing bettered, but rather grew worse, ²⁹ when she had heard of Jesus, came in the press behind, and touched his garment,—³⁰ touched the hem of his garment,—³¹ for she said, “If I may touch but his clothes, I shall be whole.” ³² And immediately her issue of blood stanchd.

Matt. 9. 20.

³³ And straightway the fountain of her blood was dried up; and she felt in her body that she was healed of that plague. ³⁴ And Jesus, immediately knowing in himself that ^d virtue had gone out of him, turned him about in the press, and said, “Who touched my clothes?”

^d Luke 6. 19. & 8. 46.

³⁵ And ³⁶ when all denied, Peter and they that were with him said, ³⁷ (his disciples said unto him), ³⁸ “Master, ³⁹ thou seest the multitude thronging thee, ⁴⁰ and press thee, ⁴¹ and sayest thou, ‘Who touched me?’” ⁴² And Jesus said, ^e Mark 5. 30.

Luke 6. 19.

⁴³ “Somebody hath touched me: for I perceive that ^e virtue is gone out of me.” ⁴³ And he looked round about to see her that had done this thing. ⁴⁴ But ⁴⁵ when the woman saw that she was not hid, she came ⁴⁶ fearing and trembling, knowing what was done in her, and fell down before him, and told him all the truth; ⁴⁷ she declared unto him, before all the people, for what cause she had touched him, and how she was healed immediately. ⁴⁸ And when he saw her, he said ⁴⁹ unto her, “Daughter, be of good comfort:—⁵⁰ Daughter, ^fthy faith hath made thee whole; go in peace, and be whole of thy plague.” ⁵¹ And the woman was made whole from that hour.

when Jesus heard it—⁵⁴ as soon as Jesus heard the word that was spoken, ⁵⁵ he answered him, [and] ⁵⁶ said unto the ruler of the synagogue, ⁵⁷ saying, ⁵⁸ “Be not afraid, only believe. ⁵⁹ Fear not, and she shall be made whole.”

the synagogue, and seeth the tumult, ⁶³ and saw ^h the minstrels and the people making a noise, ⁶⁴ and them that wept and wailed greatly. ⁶⁵ And when he was come in, he

ye therefore wise as serpents, and ^zharmless as doves. ¹⁷ But beware of men: for ^athey will deliver you up to the Councils, ^aand they will scourge you in their synagogues; ¹⁸ and ^bye shall be brought before governors and kings for my sake, for a testimony against them and the Gentiles. ¹⁹ But ^cwhen they deliver you up, take no thought how or what ye shall speak: for ^dit shall be given you in that same hour what ye shall speak; ²⁰ for ^eit is not ye that speak, but the Spirit of the house [†]Beelzebub, how much more ^{shall they call} them of his household! ²⁶ Fear them not therefore: ^mfor there is nothing covered, that shall not be revealed; and hid, that shall not be known. ²⁷ What I tell you in darkness, ^{that} speak ye in light: and what ye hear in the ³² “Whosoever ^f therefore shall confess me before men, ^g him will I confess also before my Father which is in heaven. ³³ But ^h whosoever shall deny me before men, him will I also deny before my Father which is in heaven. ³⁴ Think ⁱ not that I am come to send peace on earth: I came not to send peace, but a sword. ³⁵ For I am come to set a man at variance ^j against his father, and the daughter against her mother, and the daughter-in-law against her mother-in-law; ³⁶ and ^k a man’s foes shall be they of his own household. ³⁷ He ^l that loveth father or mother more than me is not worthy of me: and he that loveth son or daughter more than me is not worthy of me. ³⁸ ^m And he that taketh not his cross, and followeth after me, is not worthy of me. ³⁹ He ⁿ that findeth his life shall lose it: and he that loseth his life for my sake shall find it.

JOHN vi. 22, to the end, and vii. 1.

²² THE day following, when the people which stood on the other side of the sea saw that there was none other boat there, save [that] one [whereinto his disciples were entered], and that Jesus went not with his disciples into the boat, but that his disciples were gone away alone, ²³ (howbeit there came other boats from Tiberias nigh unto the place where they did eat bread, after that the Lord had given thanks;) ²⁴ when the people therefore saw that Jesus was not there, neither his disciples, they also took shipping, and came to Capernaum, seeking for Jesus.

²⁵ And when they had found him on the other side of the sea, they said unto him, “Rabbi, when camest thou hither?” ²⁶ Jesus answered them and said, “Verily, verily, I say unto you, Ye seek me, not because ye saw the miracles, but because ye did eat of the loaves, and were filled. ²⁷ *Labor not for the meat which perisheth, but ^afor that meat which endureth unto everlasting life, which the Son of Man shall give unto you: ^bfor him hath God the Father sealed.”

²⁸ Then said they unto him, “What shall we do, that we might work the works of God?”

³⁰ They said therefore unto him, “What ^dsign showest thou then, that we may see, and believe thee? what dost thou work? ³¹ ^eOur fathers did eat manna in the desert; as it is written, ‘He ^fgave them bread from heaven to eat.’”

³² Then Jesus said unto them, “Verily, verily, I say unto you, Moses gave you not that bread from heaven; but my Father giveth you the true bread from heaven. ³³ For the bread of God is He which cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world.”

³⁴ Then ^gsaid they unto him, “Lord, evermore give us this bread.”

³⁵ And Jesus said unto them, “I ^ham the breadⁿ of life: ⁱhe that cometh to me shall never hunger; and he that believeth on me shall never thirst. ³⁶ But ^jI said unto you, That ye also have seen me, and believe not. ³⁷ All ^kthat the Father giveth me shall come to me; and ^lhim that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out; ³⁸ for I came down from heaven, ^mnot to do mine own will, ⁿbut the will of Him that sent me. ³⁹ And this is the Father’s will [which hath sent me], ^othat of all which he hath given me I should lose nothing, but should raise it up again at the last day. ⁴⁰ And this is the will of Him that sent me, ^pthat every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life: and I will raise him up at the last day.”

⁴¹ The Jews then murmured at him, because he said, “I am the bread which came down from heaven;” ⁴² and they said, “Is ^qnot this Jesus, the son of Joseph, whose father and mother we know? how is it then that he saith, I came down from heaven?”

among yourselves. ⁴⁴ No ^r man can come to me, except the Father which hath sent me draw him : and I will raise him up at the last day. ⁴⁵ It ^s is written in the Prophets, ‘ And they shall be all taught of God.’ ‘ Every man therefore that hath heard, and hath learned of the Father, cometh unto me. ⁴⁶ Not ^u that any man hath seen the Father, ^v save he which is of God, he hath seen the Father. ⁴⁷ Verily, verily, I say unto you, ^w He that believeth on me hath everlasting life. ⁴⁸ I ^x am that Bread of Life. ⁴⁹ Your ^y fathers did eat manna in the wilderness, and are dead : ⁵⁰ this ^z is the Bread which cometh down from heaven, that a man may eat thereof, and not die. ⁵¹ I am the Living Bread ^a which came down from heaven : if any man eat of this Bread, he shall live for ever. And ^b the bread that I will give is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world.”

⁵² The Jews therefore ^c strove among themselves, saying, “ How ^d can this man give us his flesh to eat ? ”

⁵³ Then Jesus said unto them, “ Verily, verily, I say unto you, ^e Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of Man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you. ⁵⁴ Whoso ^f eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life ; and I will raise him up at the last day. ⁵⁵ For my flesh is meat indeed, and my blood is drink indeed. ⁵⁶ He that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, ^g dwelleth in me, and I in him. ⁵⁷ As the living Father hath sent me, and I live by the Father : so he that eateth me, even he shall live by me. ⁵⁸ This ^h is that Bread which came down from heaven : not as your fathers did eat [manna], and are dead : he that eateth of this Bread shall live for ever.”

⁵⁹ These things said he in the synagogue, as he taught in Capernaum. ⁶⁰ Many ⁱ therefore of his disciples, when they had heard this, said, “ This is a hard saying ; who can hear it ? ” ⁶¹ When Jesus knew in himself that his disciples murmured at it, he said unto them, “ Doth this offend you ? ⁶² What ^j and if ye shall see the Son of Man ascend up where he was before ? ⁶³ It ^k is the Spirit that quickeneth ; the flesh profiteth nothing : the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life. ⁶⁴ But ^l there are some of you that believe not.” For ^m Jesus knew from the beginning who they were that believed not, and who should betray him. ⁶⁵ And he said, “ Therefore ⁿ said I unto you, that no man can come unto me, except it were given unto him of my Father.” ⁶⁶ From ^o that time many of his disciples went back, and walked no more with him. ⁶⁷ Then said Jesus unto the Twelve, “ Will ye also go away ? ” ⁶⁸ [Then] Simon Peter answered him, “ Lord, to whom shall we go ? thou hast ^p the words of eternal life. ⁶⁹ And ^q we believe and are sure that thou art that Christ, the Son of [the living] God.” ⁷⁰ Jesus answered them, “ Have ^r not I chosen you Twelve, ^s and one of you is a devil ? ” ⁷¹ He spake of Judas Iscariot the son of Simon ; for he it was that should betray him, being one of the Twelve.

SECTION XXI.—The Disciples contend for Superiority.^c

MATT. xviii. 1, to the end.—MARK ix. part of ver. 33, to the end.—LUKE ix. 47–50.

- ¹ MATT. xviii. 1. ¹ AT "the same time, ² being in the house, ³ came the disciples unto Jesus, saying, "Who is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven?" ⁴ And he asked them, "What was it that ye disputed among yourselves by the way?"
- ⁵ MATT. xviii. 2. ⁵ But they held their peace: for by the way they had disputed among themselves, who should be the greatest.
- ⁶ MATT. xviii. 3. ⁶ And Jesus, perceiving the thought of their heart, ⁷ sat down, and called the Twelve, and saith unto them, "If ⁸ any man desire to be first, the same shall be last of all, and servant of all." ⁹ And Jesus called a little child unto him, and set him in the midst of them,—¹⁰ by him ¹¹ in the midst of them: and when he had taken him in his arms, he said unto them, ¹² "Verily I say unto you, ¹³ Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven. ¹⁴ Whosoever ¹⁵ therefore shall humble himself as this little child, the same is greatest in the kingdom of heaven. ¹⁶ And ¹⁷ whoso shall receive one such little child in my name, receiveth me: ¹⁸ and ¹⁹ whosoever shall receive me, receiveth not me, but Him that sent me: ²⁰ for ²¹ he that is least among you all, the same shall be great." ²² And ²³ John answered him, saying, "Master, we saw one casting out devils in thy name, [and he followeth not us:] and we forbad him, because he followeth not us." ²⁴ But Jesus said, "Forbid him not: ²⁵ for there is no man which shall do a miracle in my name, that can lightly speak evil of me. ²⁶ For ²⁷ he that is not against us is on our part. ²⁸ For ²⁹ whosoever shall give you a cup of water to drink in my name, because ye belong to Christ, verily I say unto you, he shall not lose his reward."
- ³⁰ MATT. xviii. 6. ³¹ But ³² whoso shall offend one of these little ones which believe in me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea.
- ³³ MATT. xviii. 7. ³⁴ Woe unto the world because of offences! for ³⁵ it must needs be that offences come; but ³⁶ woe to that man by whom the offence cometh! ³⁷ Wherefore ³⁸ if thy hand or thy foot ³⁹ offend thee, cut them off, and east them from thee: ⁴⁰ if ⁴¹ thy hand ⁴² offend thee, cut it off: it is better for thee to enter into life maimed, than having two hands to go into hell, into the fire that never shall be quenched: ⁴³ where ⁴⁴ their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched. ⁴⁵ And if thy foot ⁴⁶ offend thee, cut it off: it is better for thee to enter halt into life, than having two feet to be cast into hell, into the fire that never shall be quenched: ⁴⁷ where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched. ⁴⁸ And if thine eye ⁴⁹ offend thee, pluck it out: ⁵⁰ and cast it from thee: it is better for thee to enter into life, ⁵¹ into the kingdom of God, with one eye, than having two eyes to be cast into hell fire; ⁵² where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched. ⁵³ For every one shall be salted with fire, ⁵⁴ and ⁵⁵ every sacrifice shall be salted with salt. ⁵⁶ Salt ⁵⁷ is good: but if the salt have lost his saltness, wherewith will ye season it? ones; for I say unto you, That in heaven "their angels do always "behold the face of my Father which is in heaven. ¹¹ For "the Son of Man is come to save that which was lost. ¹² How "think ye? if a man have a hundred sheep, and one of them be gone astray, doth he not leave the ninety and nine, and goeth into the mountains, and seeketh that which is gone astray? ¹³ And if so be that he find it, verily I say unto you, he rejoiceth more of that sheep, than of the ninety and nine which went not astray. ¹⁴ Even so it is not the will of your Father which is in heaven, that one of these little ones should perish.

¹⁵ " Moreover "if thy brother shall trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone: if he shall hear thee, "thou hast gained thy brother. ¹⁶ But if he will not hear thee, then take with thee one or two more, that in ^bthe mouth of two or three witnesses every word may be established. ¹⁷ And if he shall neglect to hear them, tell it unto the Church: but if he neglect to hear the Church, let him be unto thee as 'a heathen man and a Publican.

¹⁸ " Verily I say unto you, ^dWhatsoever ye shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever ye shall loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven. ¹⁹ Again 'I say unto you, That if two of you shall agree on earth as touching any thing that they shall ask, ^fit shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven. ²⁰ For where two or three are gathered together in my Name, there am I in the midst of them." ^e

²¹ Then came Peter to him, and said, "Lord, how oft shall my brother sin against me, and I forgive him? "till seven times?"

Until seventy times seven. ²³ Therefore is the kingdom of heaven likened unto a certain king, which would take account of his servants.

²⁴ And when he had begun to reckon, one was brought unto him, which owed him ten thousand *talents. ²⁵ But forasmuch as he had not to pay, his lord commanded him ⁱto be sold, and his wife, and children, and all that he had, and payment to be made. ²⁶ The servant therefore fell down, and [†]worshipped him, saying, 'Lord! have patience with me, and I will pay thee all.' ²⁷ Then the lord of that servant was moved with compassion, and loosed him, and forgave him the debt. ²⁸ But the same servant went out, and found one of his fellow-servants, which owed him a hundred [‡]pence: and he laid hands on him, and took him by the throat, saying, 'Pay me that thou owest!' ²⁹ And his fellow-servant fell down [at his feet], and besought him, saying, 'Have patience with me, and I will pay thee [all].' ³⁰ And he would not: but went and cast him into prison, till he should pay the debt. ³¹ So when his fellow-servants saw what was done, they were very sorry, and came and told unto their lord all that was done. ³² Then his lord, after that he had called him, said unto him, 'O thou wicked servant! I forgave thee all that debt, because thou desiredst me: ³³ shouldest not thou also have had compassion on thy fellow-servant, even as I had pity on thee?' ³⁴ And his lord was wroth, and delivered him to the tormentors, till he should pay all that was due unto him. ³⁵ So ^jlikewise shall my heavenly Father do also unto you, if ye from your hearts forgive not every one his brother [their trespasses]."

MATT. XVIII. part of ver. 3, 8, and 9.—3 And said,—8 "—it is better for thee to enter into life halt or maimed, rather than having two hands or two feet, to be cast into everlasting fire. 9 And if thine eye offend thee, pluck it out,—with one eye, rather than having two eyes to be cast into hell fire."

FROM THE MISSION OF THE SEVENTY DISCIPLES TO THE TRIUMPHAL ENTRY OF CHRIST INTO JERUSALEM, SIX DAYS BEFORE THE CRUCIFIXION.

SECTION I.—The Mission of the Seventy Disciples.^a

LUKE x. 1–16.

¹¹ THEN ^athe Jews sought him at the feast, and said, "Where is he?" ¹² And ^bthere was much murmuring among the people concerning him: for ^csome said, "He is a good man:" others said, "Nay; but he deceiveth the people." ¹³ Howbeit no man spake openly of him ^dfor fear of the Jews.

¹⁴ Now about the midst of the feast Jesus went up into the temple, and taught. ¹⁵ And ^ethe Jews marvelled, saying, "How knoweth this man ^fletters, having never learned?" ¹⁶ Jesus answered them, and said, "My ^gdoctrine is not mine, but His that sent me; ¹⁷ if ^hany man ⁱwill do His will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself. ¹⁸ He ^jthat speaketh of himself seeketh his own glory; but he that seeketh His glory that sent him, the same is true, and no unrighteousness is in him. ¹⁹ Did ^knot Moses give you the Law, and ^lyet none of you keepeth the Law? ^mWhy go ye about to kill me?" ²⁰ The people answered and said, "Thou ⁿhast a devil: who goeth about to kill thee?" ²¹ Jesus answered and said unto them, "I have done one work, and ye all marvel. ²² Moses ^otherefore gave unto you circumcision; (not because it is of Moses, ^pbut of the fathers:) and ye on the Sabbath day circumsise a man. ²³ If a man on the Sabbath day receive circumcision, ^qthat the Law of Moses should not be broken; are ye angry at me, because ^rI have made a man every whit whole on the Sabbath day? ²⁴ Judge ^snot according to the appearance, but judge righteous judgment."

²⁵ Then said some of them of Jerusalem, "Is not this he, whom they seek to kill? ²⁶ But, lo! he speaketh boldly, and they say nothing unto him; do the rulers know indeed that this is the very Christ? ²⁷ Howbeit ^twe know this man whence he is: but when Christ cometh, no man knoweth whence he is."

²⁸ Then cried Jesus in the temple as he taught, saying, "Ye ^uboth know me, and ye know whence I am: and ^vI am not come of myself, but He that sent me ^wis true, "whom ye know not! ²⁹ But ^xI know Him: for I am from Him, and He hath sent me." ³⁰ Then ^ythey sought to take him: but ^zno man laid hands on him, because his hour was not yet come.

³¹ And ^amany of the people believed on him, and said, "When Christ cometh, will he do more miracles than these which this man hath done?" ³² The Pharisees heard that the people murmured such things concerning him ; and the Pharisees and the Chief Priests sent officers to take him. ³³ Then said Jesus unto them, “ Yet ^a a little while am I with you, and then I go unto Him that sent me.” ³⁴ Ye “ shall seek me, and shall not find me : and where I am, thither ye cannot come.” ³⁵ Then said the Jews among themselves, “ Whither will he go, that we shall not find him ? will he go unto ^b the dispersed among the ^{*} Gentiles, and teach the Gentiles ? ” ³⁶ What manner of saying is this that he said, ‘ Ye shall seek me, and shall not find me : and where I am, thither ye cannot come ? ’ ”

³⁷ In ^c the last day, that great day of the feast, Jesus stood and cried, saying, “ If ^d any man thirst, let him come unto me, and drink ! ” ³⁸ He ^e that believeth on me, as the Scripture hath said, ^f out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water. ’ ” ³⁹ (But ^g this spake he of the Spirit, which they that believe on him should receive ; for the Holy Ghost was not yet given ; because that Jesus was not yet ^h glorified.)

⁴⁰ Many of the people therefore, when they heard this saying, said, “ Of a truth this is ⁱ The Prophet.” ⁴¹ Others said, “ This ^j is The Christ.” But some said, “ Shall Christ come ^k out of Galilee ? ” ⁴² hath ^l not the Scripture said, ‘ That Christ cometh of the seed of David, and out of the town of Bethlehem, ^m where David ^f was ? ’ ” ⁴³ So ⁿ there was a division among the people because of him.

⁴⁴ And ^o some of them would have taken him ; but no man laid hands on him. ⁴⁵ Then came the officers to the Chief Priests and Pharisees ; and they said unto them, “ Why have ye not brought him ? ” ⁴⁶ The officers answered, “ Never ^p man spake like this man.” ⁴⁷ Then answered them the Pharisees, “ Are ye also deceived ? ” ⁴⁸ have ^q any of the rulers or of the Pharisees believed on him ? ⁴⁹ but this people who knoweth not the Law are cursed.” ^g ⁵⁰ Nicodemus saith unto them (he ^r that came ^{*} to Jesus by night, being one of them), ⁵¹ “ Doth ^s our Law judge any man, before it hear him, and know what he doeth ? ” ⁵² They answered and said unto him, “ Art thou also of Galilee ? SECTION IV.—Conduct of Christ to the Adulteress and her Accusers.^h
JOHN vii. 53, and viii. 1-11.

[⁵³ AND every man went unto his own house : ¹ Jesus went unto the Mount of Olives. ² And early in the morning, he came again into the temple, and all the people came unto him ; and he sat down, and taught them. ³ And the Scribes and Pharisees brought [unto him] a woman taken in adultery ; and when they had set her in the midst, ⁴ they say unto him, “ Master, this woman was taken in adultery, in the very act. ⁵ Now ^a Moses in the Law commanded us, that such should be stoned : but what sayest thou ? ” ⁶ This they said, tempting him, that they might have to accuse him. But Jesus stooped down, and with his finger wrote on the ground, as though he heard them not. ⁷ So when they continued asking him, he lifted up himself, and said unto them, “ He ^b that is without sin among you, let him first cast a stone at her.” ⁸ And again he stooped down, and wrote on the ground. ⁹ And they which heard it, [^c being convicted by their own conscience,] went out one by one, beginning at the eldest, even [unto the last:] and Jesus was left alone, and the woman standing in the midst. ¹⁰ When Jesus had lifted up himself, [and saw none but the woman,] he said unto her, “ Woman, where are those thine accusers ? hath no man condemned thee ? ” ¹¹ She said, “ No man, Lord.”

JOHN viii. 21, to the end.

²¹ THEN said Jesus again unto them, "I go my way, and ^aye shall seek me, and ^bshall die in your sins: whither I go, ye cannot come." ²² Then said the Jews, "Will he kill himself? because he saith, 'Whither I go, ye cannot come.' " ²³ And he said unto them, "Ye ^care from beneath; I am from above: ^dye are of this world; I am not of this world. ²⁴ I ^esaid therefore unto you, that ye shall die in your sins: ^ffor if ye believe not that I am He, ye shall die in your sins." ²⁵ Then said they unto him, "Who art thou?" And Jesus saith unto them, "Even the same that I said unto you from the beginning. ²⁶ I have many things to say and to judge of you: ^gbut He that sent me is true; and ^hI speak to the world those things which I have heard of Him." ²⁷ (They understood not that he spake to them of the Father.) ²⁸ Then said Jesus unto them, "When ye have ⁱlifted up the Son of Man, ^jthen shall ye know that I am He; and ^kthat I do nothing of myself, but ^las my Father hath taught me, I speak these things; ²⁹ and ^m*He* that sent me is with me. ⁿThe Father hath not left me alone, ^ofor I do always those things that please Him."

³⁰ As he spake these words, ^pmany believed on him. ³¹ Then said Jesus to those Jews which believed on him, "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; ³² and ye shall know the truth, and ^qthe truth shall make you free."

³³ They answered him, "We ^rbe Abraham's seed, and were never in bondage to any man: how sayest thou, 'Ye shall be made free?' " ³⁴ Jesus answered them, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, ^sWhosoever committeth sin is the servant of sin. ³⁵ And ^tthe servant abideth not in the house for ever: but the Son abideth ever. ³⁶ If ^u"the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed. ³⁷ I know that ye are Abraham's seed; but ^vye seek to kill me, because my word hath no place in you. ³⁸ I ^wspeak that which I have seen with my Father; and ye do that which ye have seen with your father."

¹ AND it came to pass, that, as he was praying in a certain place, when he ceased, one of his disciples said unto him, “Lord, teach us to pray, as John also taught his disciples.” ² And he said unto them, “When ye pray, say, “[Our] Father [which art in heaven], hallowed be thy name: thy kingdom come: [thy will be done, as in heaven, so in earth:] ³ give us *day by day our daily bread: ⁴ and forgive us our sins; for we also forgive every one that is indebted to us: and lead us not into temptation; [but deliver us from evil].”

³⁷ AND as he spake, a certain Pharisee besought him to dine with him: and he went in, and sat down to meat. ³⁸ And “when the Pharisee saw it, he marvelled that he had not first washed before dinner. ³⁹ And ^bthe Lord said unto him, “Now do ye Pharisees make clean the outside of the cup and the platter; but ^cyour inward part is full of ravening and wickedness. ⁴⁰ Ye fools! did not he that made that which is without make that which is within also? ⁴¹ But “rather give alms *of such things as ye have; and, behold! all things are clean unto you. ⁴² But ^ewoe unto you, Pharisees! for ye tithe mint and rue and all manner of herbs, and pass over judgment and the love of God. ¹ IN ^athe mean time, when there were gathered together an innumerable multitude of people, insomuch that they trode one upon another, he began to say unto his disciples first of all, "Beware ^bye of the leaven of the Pharisees, which is hypocrisy. ²For ^cthere is nothing covered, that shall not be revealed; neither hid, that shall not be known. ³Therefore whatsoever ye have spoken in darkness shall be heard in the light; and that which ye have spoken in the ear in closets shall be proclaimed upon the housetops. ⁴And ^dI say unto you my friends, Be not afraid of them that kill the body, and after that have no more that they can do. ⁵But I will forewarn you whom ye shall fear. Fear Him, which, after he hath killed, hath power to cast into hell; yea, I say unto you, Fear Him! ⁶Are not five sparrows sold for two ^efarthings? and not one of them is forgotten before God; ⁷but even the very hairs of your head are all numbered. Fear not therefore: ^fye are of more value than many sparrows.

⁸ "Also ^gI say unto you, Whosoever shall confess me before men, him shall the Son of Man also confess before the angels of God; ⁹but he that denieth me before men shall be denied before the angels of God. ¹⁰And ^hwhosoever shall speak a word against the Son of Man, it shall be forgiven him; but unto him that blasphemeth against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven. ¹¹And ⁱwhen they bring you unto the synagogues, and ^{unto} magistrates, and powers, take ye no thought how or what thing ye shall answer, or what ye shall say; ¹²for the Holy Ghost shall teach you in the same hour what ye ought to say."

¹ AND as Jesus passed by, he saw a man which was blind from his birth. ² And his disciples asked him, saying, “Master, ^awho did sin, this man, or his parents, that he was born ^ublind?” ³ Jesus answered, “Neither hath this man sinned, nor his parents; ^bbut that the works of God should be made manifest in him. ⁴ I ^cmust work the works of Him that sent me, while it is day: the night cometh, when no man can work. ⁵ As long as I am in the world, ^dI am the light of the world.” ⁶ When he had thus spoken, ^ehe spat on the ground, and made clay of the spittle, and he ^{*}anointed the eyes of the blind man with the ^xclay, ⁷ and said unto him, “Go, wash ^fin the pool of Siloām,” (which is by interpretation, Sent). ⁸ He went his way therefore, and washed, and came seeing. ⁹ The neighbours therefore, and they which before had seen him that he was blind, said, “Is not this he that sat and begged?” ⁹ Some said, “This is he.” Others said, “He is like him.” But he said, “I am he.” ¹⁰ Therefore said they unto him, “How were thine eyes opened?” ¹¹ He answered and said, “A ^hman that is called Jesus made clay, and anointed mine eyes, and said unto me, ‘Go to the pool of Siloām and wash.’ And I went and washed, and I received sight.” ¹² Then said they unto him, “Where is he?” He said, “I know not.” ¹³ They brought to the Pharisees him that aforetime was blind. ¹⁴ And it was the Sabbath day when Jesus made the clay, and opened his eyes. ¹⁵ Then again the Pharisees also asked him how he had received his sight. He said unto them, “He put clay upon mine eyes, and I washed, and do see.” ¹⁶ Therefore said some of the Pharisees, “This man is not of God, because he keepeth not the Sabbath day.” Others said, “How ⁱcan a man that is a sinner do such miracles?”

⁴⁰And some of the Pharisees which were with him heard these words, and said unto him, "Are we blind also?" ⁴¹Jesus said unto them, "If ^hye were blind, ye should have no sin: but now ye say, 'We see;' therefore your sin remaineth. ¹Verily, verily, I say unto you, John x. 1-21. He that entereth not by the door into the sheepfold, but climb-eth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber; ²but he that entereth in by the door is the shepherd of the sheep. ³To him the porter openeth; and the sheep hear his voice; and he calleth his own sheep by name, and leadeth them out. ⁴And when he putteth forth his own sheep, he goeth before them; and the sheep follow him, for they know his voice. ⁵And a stranger will they not follow, but will flee from him; for they know not the voice of strangers." ⁶This parable spake Jesus unto them : but they understood not what things they were which he spake unto them.

⁷Then said Jesus unto them again, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, I am the Door of the sheep. ⁸All that ever came before me are thieves and robbers : but the sheep did not hear them. ⁹I ^εam the Door : by me - if any man enter in, he shall be saved, and shall go in and out, and find pasture. ¹⁰The thief cometh not, but for to steal, and to kill, and to destroy : I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly. ¹¹I ^ham the good Shepherd : the good shepherd giveth his life for the sheep. ¹²But he that is an hireling, and not the shepherd, whose own the sheep are not, seeth the wolf coming, and ⁱleaveth the sheep, and fleeth ; and the wolf catcheth them, and scattereth the sheep. ¹³The hireling fleeth, because he is an hireling, and careth not for the sheep. ¹⁴I am the good Shepherd, and ^jknow my sheep, and am known of mine. ¹⁵As the Father knoweth me, ^keven so ^kknow I the Father : ^mand I lay down my life for the sheep. ¹⁶And ⁿother sheep I have, which are not of this fold ; them also I must bring ; and they shall hear my voice, ^oand there shall be one fold, and one shepherd. ¹⁷Therefore doth my Father love me, ^pbecause I lay down my life, that I might take it again. ¹⁸(No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself ; I have power to lay it down, and I ^qhave power to take it again.) This ^rcommandment have I received of my Father."

¹⁹There ^swas a division therefore again among the Jews for these sayings. ²⁰And many of them said, "He ^thath a devil, and is mad ; why hear ye him ?" ²¹Others said, "These are not the words of him that hath a devil. "Can a devil open the eyes of the blind ?"

a Matt. 12. 10.

b Exod. 23. 5.
Deut. 22. 4. ch.
13. 15.

¹ AND it came to pass, as he went into the house of one of the chief Pharisees to eat bread on the Sabbath day, that they watched him. ² And, behold ! there was a certain man before him which had the dropsy. ³ And Jesus answering spake unto the lawyers and Pharisees, saying, "Is ^ait lawful to heal on the Sabbath-day ?" ⁴ And they held their peace. And he took him, and healed him, and let him go. ⁵ And answered them, saying, "Which ^bof you shall have an ass or an ox fallen into a pit, and will not straightway pull him out on the Sabbath day ?" ⁶ And they could not answer him again to these things. ⁷ And he put forth a parable to those which were bidden, when he marked how they chose out the chief rooms; saying unto them, ⁸ "When thou art bidden of any man to a wedding, sit not down in the highest room; lest a more honorable man than thou be bidden of him; ⁹ and he that bade thee and him come and say to thee, Give this man place; and thou begin with shame to take the lowest room.

¹⁰ But ^cwhen thou art bidden, go and sit down in the lowest room; that when he that bade thee cometh, he may say unto thee, Friend, go up higher. Then shalt thou have worship in the presence of them that sit at meat with thee. ¹¹ For ^dwhosoever exalteth himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted."

¹² Then said he also to him that bade him, "When thou makest a dinner or a supper, call not thy friends, nor thy brethren, neither thy kinsmen, nor thy rich neighbours; lest they also bid thee again, and a recompence be made thee. ¹³ But when thou makest a feast, call ^ethe poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind; ¹⁴ and thou shalt be blessed; for they cannot recompense thee; for thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just."

¹⁵ And when one of them that sat at meat with him heard these things, he said unto him, "Blessed ^fis he that shall eat bread in the kingdom of God!" ¹⁶ Then ^gsaid he unto him, "A certain man made a great supper, and bade many. ¹⁷ And ^hsent his servant at supper-time to say to them that were bidden, Come; for all things are now ready. ¹⁸ And they all ⁱwith one consent began to make excuse. The first said unto him, I have bought a piece of ground, and I must needs go and see it: I pray thee have me excused. ¹⁹ And another said, I have bought five yoke of oxen, and I go to prove them: I pray thee have me excused. ²⁰ And another said, I have married a wife, and therefore I cannot come. ²¹ So that servant came, and showed his lord these things. Then the master of the house being angry said to his servant, Go out quickly into the streets and lanes of the city, and bring in hither the poor, and the maimed, and the halt, and the blind.
²² And the servant said, Lord, it is done as thou hast commanded, and yet there is room. ²³ And the lord said unto the servant, Go out into the highways and hedges, and compel them to come in, that my house may be filled. ²⁴ For I say unto you, ^jThat none of those men which were bidden shall taste of my supper."

¹¹ AND He said, “A certain man had two sons: ¹² and the younger of them said to his father, Father, give me the portion of goods that falleth to me. And he divided unto them ^ahis living. ¹³ And not many days after, the younger son gathered all together, and took his journey into a far country, and there wasted his substance with riotous living. ¹⁴ And when he had spent all, there arose a mighty famine in that land; and he began to be in want. ¹⁵ And he went and joined himself to a citizen of that country: and he sent him into his fields to feed swine. ¹⁶ And he would fain have filled his belly with the husks that the swine did eat; and no man gave unto him. ¹⁷ And when he came to himself, he said, How many hired servants of my father’s have bread enough and to spare! and I perish with hunger. ¹⁸ I will arise and go to my father, and will say unto him, Father, I have sinned against Heaven, and before thee, ¹⁹ and am no more worthy to be called thy son; make me as one of thy hired servants. ²⁰ And he arose, and came to his father. But ^bwhen he was yet a great way off, his father saw him, and had compassion; and ran, and fell on his neck, and kissed him. ²¹ And the son said unto him, Father, I have sinned against Heaven, ^cand in thy sight; and am no more worthy to be called thy son. ²² But the father said to his servants, Bring forth the best robe, and put it on him; and put a ring on his hand, and shoes on his feet. ²³ And bring hither the fatted calf, and kill it; and let us eat, and be merry: ²⁴ for ^dthis my son was dead, and is alive again; he was lost, and is found. And they began to be merry. ²⁵ Now his elder son was in the field; and as he came and drew nigh to the house, he heard music and dancing. ²⁶ And he called one of the servants, and asked what these things meant. ²⁷ And he said unto him, Thy brother is come; and thy father hath killed the fatted calf, because he hath received him safe and sound. ²⁸ And he was angry, and would not go in. Therefore came his father out, and entreated him. ²⁹ And he answering said to his father, “Lo! these many years do I serve thee, neither transgressed I at any time thy commandment; and yet thou never gavest me a kid, that I might make merry with my friends. ³⁰ But as soon as this thy son was come, which hath devoured thy living with harlots, thou hast killed for him the fatted calf!’ ³¹ And he said unto him, ‘Son, thou art ever with me, and all that I have is thine. ³² It was meet that we should make merry, and be glad: ‘for this thy brother was dead, and is alive again; and was lost, and is found!’” e ver. 24.

LUKE XVI. 1-13.

¹AND He said also unto his disciples, “There was a certain rich man, which had a steward; and the same was accused unto him that he had wasted his goods. ² And he called him, and said unto him, ‘How is it that I hear this of thee? give an account of thy stewardship; for thou mayest be no longer steward.’ ³ Then the steward said within himself, What shall I do, “for my lord taketh away from me the stewardship? I cannot dig; to beg I am ashamed. ⁴ I am resolved what to do, that, when I am put out of the stewardship, they may receive me into their houses. ⁵ So he called every one of his lord’s debtors unto him, and said unto the first, ‘How much owest thou unto my lord?’ ⁶ And he said, ‘An hundred *measures of oil.’ And he said unto him, ‘Take thy bill, and sit down quickly, and write fifty.’ ⁷ Then said he to another, ‘And how much owest thou?’ And he said, ‘An hundred †measures of wheat.’ And he said unto him, ‘Take thy bill, and write fourscore.’ ⁸ And the lord commended the unjust steward, because he had done wisely; for the children of this world are in their generation wiser than ^bthe children of light. ⁹ And I say unto you, ‘Make to yourselves friends of the †mammon of unrighteousness; that, when ye fail, they may receive you into everlasting habitations. ¹⁰ He ^athat is faithful in that which is least is faithful also in much; and he that is unjust in the least is unjust also in much. ¹¹ If therefore ye have not been faithful in the unrighteous *mammon, who will commit to your trust the true riches? ¹² and if ye have not been faithful in that which is another man’s, who shall give you that which is your own? ¹³ No ‘servant can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and Mammon.”

SECTION XXIX.—Christ reproves the Pharisees.
LUKE XVI. 14-17.

¹⁴AND the Pharisees also, “who were covetous, heard all these things; and they derided Him. ¹⁵ And he said unto them, “Ye are they which ^bjustify yourselves before men; but ‘God knoweth your hearts; for ^athat which is highly esteemed among men is abomination in the sight of God. ¹⁶ The ‘Law and the Prophets were until John: since that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every man presseth into it. ¹⁷ And ^cit is easier for heaven and earth to pass, than one tittle of the Law to fail.”

The rich man also died, and was buried. ²³ And in hell he lift up his eyes, being in torments, and seeth Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his bosom. ²⁴ And he cried and said, 'Father Abraham! have mercy on me, and send Lazarus, that he may dip the tip of his finger in water, and ^ccool my tongue; for I ^bam tormented in this flame.' ²⁵ But Abraham said, 'Son! ^cremember that thou in thy lifetime receivedst thy good things, and likewise Lazarus evil things; but now he is comforted, and thou art tormented. ²⁶ And beside all this, between us and you there is a great gulf fixed, so that they which would pass from hence to you cannot, neither can they pass to us, that would come from thence.' ²⁷ Then he said, 'I pray thee therefore, father, that thou wouldest send him to my father's house; ²⁸ for I have five brethren; that he may testify unto them, lest they also come into this place of torment.' ²⁹ Abraham saith unto him, 'They ^dhave Moses and the Prophets; let them hear them.' ³⁰ And he said, 'Nay, father Abraham; but if one went unto them from the dead, they will repent.' ³¹ And he said unto him, 'If they hear not Moses and the Prophets, ^eneither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead.' MATT. XIX. 16-29.—MARK X. 17-30.—LUKE XVIII. 18-30.

¹ AND ² when He was gone forth, into the way, ³ behold! one came, ⁴ a certain ruler, ⁵ running, and kneeled to him, and asked him, ⁶ and said unto him, "Good ^a Master, what good thing shall I do, that I may have eternal life?" ⁷ And he said unto him, "Why callest thou me good? there is none good but One, that is, God. But if thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments." ⁸ He saith unto him, "Which?" Jesus said, ⁹ "Thou knowest the commandments. ¹⁰ Thou ^b shalt do no murder; Thou shalt not commit adultery; Thou shalt not steal; Thou shalt not bear false witness; ¹¹ Defraud not; ¹² Honor ^c thy father and ^{thy} mother; and, ^d Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself." ¹³ The young man ¹⁴ answered, and ¹⁵ saith unto him, "All these things have I kept from my youth up: what lack I yet?" ¹⁶ Now when Jesus heard these things, he, ¹⁷ beholding him, loved him, and ¹⁸ Jesus said unto him, ¹⁹ "Yet lackest thou one thing: ²⁰ if ^e thou wilt be perfect, ²¹ go thy way, ²² go, and sell that thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven, and come, ²³ take up the cross, ²⁴ and follow me." ²⁵ But when the young man heard that saying, ²⁶ he was very sorrowful; ²⁷ he went away sorrowful, for he had great possessions. ²⁸ And when Jesus saw that he was very sorrowful, he ²⁹ looked round about; ³⁰ then said Jesus unto his disciples, ³¹ "How ^f hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God! ³² Verily I say unto you, That ^g a rich man shall hardly enter into the kingdom of heaven." ³³ And the disciples were astonished at his words. But Jesus answereth again, and saith unto them, "Children, how hard is it for them ^h that trust in riches to enter into the kingdom of God! ³⁴ And again I say unto you, It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God." ³⁵ When his disciples heard it, they were exceedingly amazed, ³⁶ and they were astonished out of measure among themselves, ³⁷ saying, "Who then can be saved?" ³⁸ But Jesus, ³⁹ looking upon them, ⁴⁰ beheld them, and said unto them, ⁴¹ "The ⁱ things which are impossible with men are possible with God. ⁴² With men this is impossible; ⁴³ but not with God: for ⁴⁴ with God all things are possible."

Acts 7. 60.

1 Cor. 15. 18, 51.

MATT. xx. 29, to the end.—MARK x. 46, to the end.—LUKE xviii. 35, to the end.

¹ AND ^ait came to pass, that as He was come nigh unto Jericho, ² as he went out of Jericho with his disciples, ³ a great multitude followed him. ⁴ And, behold! two blind men sitting by the way side,—⁵ a certain blind man, ⁶ blind Bartimæus, the son of Timæus, ⁷ sat by the way side, begging; ⁸ and hearing the multitude pass by, he asked what it meant. ⁹ And they told him, that Jesus of Nazareth passeth by. ¹⁰ When they heard that Jesus passed by, ¹¹ and when he heard that it was Jesus of Nazareth, he began to cry out, ¹² and he cried, saying, “Jesus, thou Son of David, have mercy on me! ¹³ have mercy on us, O Lord, thou Son of David!” ¹⁴ And the multitude, ¹⁵ which went before, rebuked him, ¹⁶ rebuked them, because they should hold their peace: ¹⁷ and many charged him ¹⁸ that he should hold his peace; but he cried so much the more, ¹⁹ but they cried the more, ²⁰ a great deal, ²¹ saying, “Have mercy on us, O Lord, thou Son of David! ²² thou Son of David, have mercy on me!” ²³ And ²⁴ Jesus stood still, and called them, ²⁵ and commanded him ²⁶ to be called, [and] ²⁷ to be brought unto him. ²⁸ And they call the blind man, saying unto him, “Be of good comfort, rise; he calleth thee.” ²⁹ And he, casting away his garment, rose, and came to Jesus; ³⁰ and when he was come near, he asked him, ³¹ saying, “What wilt thou that I shall do unto thee?” And he said, ³² “Lord! that our eyes may be opened: ³³ Lord! that I may receive my sight.” ³⁴ So Jesus had compassion on them, and touched their eyes: ³⁵ And Jesus said unto him, “Receive thy sight; thy ^bfaith hath saved thee. ³⁶ Go thy way, thy faith hath ^{*}made thee whole.” ³⁷ And immediately he received his sight, and followed him ³⁸ in the way, ³⁹ their eyes received sight, and they followed him, ⁴⁰ glorifying ^cGod; and all the people, when they saw it, gave praise unto God.

LUKE XIX. 1-28.

¹ AND Jesus entered and passed through Jericho. ² And, behold ! there was a man named Zacchæus, which was the chief among the Publicans, and he was rich. ³ And he sought to see Jesus who he was ; and could not for the press, because he was little of stature. ⁴ And he ran before, and climbed up into a sycamore tree to see him : for he was to pass that way. ⁵ And when Jesus came to the place, he looked up, and saw him, and said unto him, “ Zacchæus, make haste, and come down ; for to-day I must abide at thy house.” ⁶ And he made haste, and came down, and received him joyfully. ⁷ And when they saw it, they all murmured, saying, “ That ^ahe was gone to be guest with a man that is a sinner.” ⁸ And Zacchæus stood, and said unto the Lord ; “ Behold ! Lord, the half of my goods I give to the poor ; and if I have taken any thing from any man by ^bfalse accusation, ^cI restore him fourfold.” ⁹ And Jesus said unto him, “ This day is salvation come to this house, forasmuch as ^dhe also is ^ea son of Abraham ; ^ffor ^gthe Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost.”

¹¹ And as they heard these things, he added and spake a parable, because he was nigh to Jerusalem, and because ^hthey thought that the kingdom of God should immediately appear. ¹² He ⁱsaid therefore,—

“ A certain nobleman went into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom, and to return. ¹³ And he called his ten servants, and delivered them ten ^jpounds, and said unto them, ‘ Occupy till I come.’ ¹⁴ But ^kthis citizens hated him, and sent a message after him, saying, ‘ We will not have this man to reign over us.’ ¹⁵ And it came to pass, that when he was returned, having received the kingdom, then he commanded these servants to be called unto him, to whom he had given the ^lmoney, that he might know how much every man had gained by trading. ¹⁶ Then came the first, saying, ‘ Lord, thy pound hath gained ten pounds.’ ¹⁷ And he said unto him, ‘ Well, thou good servant ! because thou hast been ^mfaithful in a very little, have thou authority over ten cities.’ ¹⁸ And the second came, saying, ‘ Lord, thy pound hath gained five pounds.’ ¹⁹ And he said likewise to him, ‘ Be thou also over five cities.’ ²⁰ And another came, saying, ‘ Lord, behold ! here is thy pound, which I have kept laid up in a napkin. ²¹ For ⁿI feared thee, because thou art an austere man : thou takest up that thou layedst not down, and reapest that thou didst not sow.’ ²² And he saith unto him, ‘ Out ^oof thine own mouth will I judge thee, thou wicked servant ! thou ^pknewest that I was an austere man, taking up that I laid not down, and reaping that I did not sow ? ²³ wherefore then gavest not thou my money into the bank, that at my coming I might have required mine own with usury ? ’ ²⁴ And he said unto them that stood by, ‘ Take from him the pound, and give it to him that hath ten pounds.’ ²⁵ (And ^qthey said unto him, ‘ Lord, he hath ten pounds.’) ²⁶ For I say unto you, ^rThat unto every one which hath shall be given ; and from him that hath not, even that he hath shall be taken away from him. ²⁷ But those mine enemies, which would not that I should reign over them, bring hither, and slay them before me.”

¹⁷ THEN when Jesus came, he found that he had lain in the grave four days already. ¹⁸ Now Bethany was nigh unto Jerusalem, about *fifteen furlongs off; ¹⁹ and many of the Jews came to Martha and Mary, to comfort them concerning their brother. ²⁰ Then Martha, as soon as she heard that Jesus was coming, went and met him; but Mary sat still in the house. ²¹ Then said Martha unto Jesus, “Lord, if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died! ²² But I know, that even now, “whatsoever thou wilt ask of God, God will give it thee.” ²³ Jesus saith unto her, “Thy brother shall rise again.” ²⁴ Martha saith unto him, “I ^bknow that he shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day.” ²⁵ Jesus said unto her, “I am ‘the Resurrection and the ^dLife: ‘he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live: ²⁶ and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die. Believest thou this?” ²⁷ She saith unto him, “Yea, Lord: ‘I believe that thou art the Christ, the Son of God, which should come into the world!”

²⁸ And when she had so said, she went her way, and called Mary her sister secretly, saying, “The Master is come, and calleth for thee.” ²⁹ As soon as she heard that, she arose quickly, and came unto him. ³⁰ (Now Jesus was not yet come into the town, but was in that place where Martha met him.) ³¹ The ^eJews then, which were with her in the house and comforted her, when they saw Mary, that she rose up hastily and went out, followed her, saying, “She goeth unto the grave to weep there.” ³² Then when Mary was come where Jesus was, and saw him, she fell down at his feet, saying unto him, “Lord, ^hif thou hadst been here, my brother had not died!”

³³ When Jesus therefore saw her weeping, and the Jews also weeping which came with her, he groaned in the spirit, and †was troubled, ³⁴ and said, “Where have ye laid him?” They said unto him, “Lord, come and see.” ³⁵ Jesus ⁱwept. ³⁶ Then said the Jews, “Behold how he loved him!” ³⁷ And some of them said, “Could not this man, ^jwhich opened the eyes of the blind, have caused that even this man should not have died?”

³⁸ Jesus therefore again groaning in himself cometh to the grave. It was a cave, and a stone lay upon it. ³⁹ Jesus said, “Take ye away the stone.” Martha, the sister of him that was dead, saith unto him, “Lord, by this time he stinketh; for he hath been dead four days.” ⁴⁰ Jesus saith unto her, “Said I not unto thee, that if thou wouldest believe, thou shouldest ^ksee the glory of God?” ⁴¹ Then they took away the stone from the place [where the dead was laid]. And Jesus lifted up his eyes, and said, “Father! I thank thee that Thou hast heard me. ⁴² And I knew that Thou hearest me always; but ^lbecause of the people which stand by I said it, that they may believe that Thou hast sent me.” ⁴³ And when he thus had spoken, he cried with a loud voice, “Lazarus, come forth!” ⁴⁴ And he that was dead came forth, bound hand and foot with grave-clothes, and ^mhis face was bound about with a napkin. Jesus saith unto them, “Loose him, and let him go.”

of ointment of spikenard, very costly,—⁹ and she brake the box, and poured it on his head, ¹⁰ as he sat at meat, ¹¹ and anointed the feet of Jesus, and wiped his feet with her hair; and the house was filled with the odor of the ointment. ¹² But when his disciples saw it, ¹³ there were some that had indignation within themselves, and said, “Why was this waste of the ointment made?” ¹⁴ For it might have been sold for more than three hundred *pence, and have been given to the poor.” And they murmured against her:—¹⁵ To what purpose is this waste?” ¹⁶ Then saith one of his disciples, Judas Iscariot, Simon’s son, which should betray him, ¹⁷ “Why was not this ointment sold for three hundred pence, and given to the poor?” ¹⁸ This he said, not that he cared for the poor; but because he was a thief, and ¹⁹ had the bag, and bare what was put therein. ²⁰ And Jesus said, “Let her alone; why trouble ye her? she hath wrought a good work on me. ²¹ For ²² ye have the poor with you always, and whensoever ye will ye may do them good; but me ye have not always. ²³ She hath done what she could; ²⁴ let her alone: against the day of my burying hath she kept this. ²⁵ For in that she hath poured this ointment on my body, she did it for my burial; ²⁶ she is come aforehand to anoint my body to the burying. ²⁷ Verily I say unto you, Wheresoever this Gospel shall be preached throughout the whole world, this also that she hath done shall be spoken of for a memorial of her.” ²⁸ Much people of the Jews therefore knew that he was there; and they came not for Jesus’ sake only, but that they might see Lazarus also, ²⁹ whom he had raised from the dead. ³⁰ But ³¹ the Chief Priests consulted that they might put Lazarus also to death; ³² because ³³ that by reason of him ³⁴ many of the Jews went away and believed on Jesus.

u The Greek word διηλύζοντες, here rendered “strain,” does not mean make an effort to swallow, but filtrate, and alludes to the custom of filtering wine to free it from the insects, which, attracted by the odor or the taste, are apt to fall into it, and get drowned. This sense was conveyed by the translations in use previous to the present revised version, in all which it stands as in the text, “strain out,” “at” being admitted to be a misprint, but which has been continued in every subsequent edition both English and American, except Baskett’s folio edit. London, 1753. The word κῶνωψ, translated “gnat,” is the minute insect bred in wine that is left exposed, and hence called culex vinarius. The other insect, which, by being set in contrast, must have been a large one, was, probably, from its peculiar shape, named “the camel.” That an insect is meant, and not the quadruped, is satisfactorily shown by the learned Cajetanus. The talmudists mention the Jabbuschin as very troublesome in getting into the open vases of wine; and Maimonides, lib. De Vitis, c. ii. § 22. says, “He who strains wine, vinegar, or strong drink, and yet eats the Jabbuschin, deserves chastisement.” The proverbial expression intimates, that the Scribes and Pharisees affected to scruple little things, and disregarded those of great moment.

MATT. XXIV. 1–35.—MARK XIII. 1–31.—LUKE XXI. 5–33.

¹² And as he sat upon the Mount of Olives over against the temple, ¹³ the disciples, ¹⁴ Peter, and James, and John, and Andrew, ¹⁵ came unto him privately, [and] ¹⁶ asked him privately, ¹⁷ saying, “Master, but ¹⁸ tell ^cus when shall these things be? and what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world? ¹⁹ when all these things shall be fulfilled?” ²⁰ And Jesus answering them began to say ²¹ unto them, “Take ^dheed that no man deceive you. ²² For ^emany shall come in my name, saying, ‘I am Christ;’ and shall deceive many. ²³ *And the time draweth near; go ye not therefore after them. ²⁴ And ye shall hear of wars and rumors of wars: but ²⁵ when ye shall hear of wars, ²⁶ and rumors of wars, ²⁷ and commotions, be not terrified; ²⁸ see that ye be not troubled; for all these things ²⁹ must needs ³⁰ first come to pass, ³¹ but the end shall not be yet.” ³² Then ^fsaid he unto them, “Nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom; ³³ and great earthquakes shall be in divers places; ³⁴ and there shall be famines, and pestilences, ³⁵ and troubles, ³⁶ and fearful sights, and great signs shall there be from heaven.

- ⁶⁵ "But ⁹when ye shall see the Abomination of Desolation, [spoken of by Daniel the prophet], standing where it ought not, ⁶⁶ in the Holy Place, (whoso ⁷readeth, let him understand!) ⁶⁷ and ¹⁰when ye shall see Jerusalem compassed with armies, then know that the desolation thereof is nigh. ⁶⁸ Then let them which are in Judæa flee to the mountains; and let them which are in the midst of it depart out; and let not them that are in the countries enter thereinto; ⁶⁹ and let him that is on the housetop not go down into the house, neither enter therein, to take any thing out of his house; ⁷⁰ neither let him which is in the field return back to take his clothes. ⁷¹ For these be the days of vengeance, that ¹¹all things which are written may be fulfilled. ⁷² But ⁷woe unto them that are with child, and to them that give suck in those days! for there shall be great distress in the land, and wrath upon this people; ⁷³ and they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations; and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, ¹²until the times of the Gentiles shall be fulfilled. ⁷⁴ But pray ye that your flight be not in the winter, neither on the Sabbath day; ⁷⁵ for ¹³in those days ⁷⁶shall be great tribulation, ⁷⁷shall be affliction, such as was not from the beginning of the creation ⁷⁸of the world ⁷⁹which God created unto this time, neither shall be, ⁸⁰no, nor ever shall be. ⁸¹ And except that the Lord had shortened those days, ⁸²there should no flesh be saved; ⁸³but for the elect's sake, whom he hath chosen, he hath shortened the days.

MATT. xxiv. 36, to the end.—MARK xiii. 32, to the end.—LUKE xxi. 34–36.

¹ Mark xiii. 32. ¹ “BUT ^a of that day and that hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels which are in heaven, neither the Son, but the Father; ² but ^b my Father only.” ³⁷ But as the days of Noe were, ^c so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be. ³⁸ For ^d as in the days that were before the flood, they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noe entered into the ark, ³⁹ and knew not until the flood came, and took them all away; ^e so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be. ⁴⁰ Then ^f shall two be in the field; the one shall be taken, and the other left. ⁴¹ Two women shall be grinding at the mill; the one shall be taken, and the other left. ³ Take ^g ye heed, watch and pray; for ye know not when the time is. ⁴ Watch, therefore; for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come. ⁴³ But know this, that if the good man of the house had known in what watch the thief would come, ^h he would have watched, and would not have suffered his house to be broken up. ⁴⁴ Therefore be ye also ready; for in such an hour as ye think not, ⁱ the Son of Man cometh.

⁹ Luke xxi. 34. ⁹ “And ^q take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting, and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares; ¹⁰ for ^r as a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth. ¹¹ Watch ^s ye, therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, ^t to stand before the Son of Man.”

¹⁴ “ FOR ^athe kingdom of heaven is as a man travelling into a far country, who called his own servants, and delivered unto them his goods; ¹⁵ and unto one he gave five ^{*}talents, to another two, and to another one; ^bto every man according to his several ability; and straightway took his journey. ¹⁶ Then he that had received the five talents went and traded with the same, and made them five other talents. ¹⁷ And likewise he that had received two, he also gained other two. ¹⁸ But he that had received one went and digged in the earth, and hid his lord’s money. ¹⁹ After a long time the lord of those servants cometh, and reckoneth with them. ²⁰ And so he that had received five talents came and brought five other talents, saying, ‘ Lord, thou deliveredst unto me five talents; behold! I have gained beside them five talents more.’ ²¹ His lord said unto him, ‘ Well done, thou good and faithful servant! thou hast been faithful over a few things, ^cI will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy lord.’ ²² He also that had received two talents came and said, ‘ Lord, thou deliveredst unto me two talents; behold! I have gained two other talents beside them.’ ²³ His lord said unto him, ‘ Well ^edone, good and faithful servant! thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy lord.’ ²⁴ Then he which had received the one talent came and said, ‘ Lord, I knew thee that thou art a hard man, reaping where thou hast not sown, and gathering where thou hast not strawed; ²⁵ and I was afraid, and went and hid thy talent in the earth; lo, there thou hast that is thine!’ ²⁶ His lord answered and said unto him, ‘ Thou wicked and slothful servant! thou knewest that I reap where I sowed not, and gather where I have not strawed? ²⁷ thou oughtest therefore to have put my money to the exchangers, and then at my coming I should have received mine own with usury.’ ²⁸ Take therefore the talent from him, and give it unto him which hath ten talents. ²⁹ For ^junto every one that hath shall be given, and he shall have

⁴¹ “Then shall he say also unto them on the left hand, ‘Depart ^kfrom me, ye cursed! into everlasting fire, prepared for the Devil and his angels. ⁴² For I was a hungered, and ye gave me no meat—I was thirsty, and ye gave me no drink—⁴³ I was a stranger, and ye took me not in—naked, and ye clothed me not—sick, and in prison, and ye visited me not.’ ⁴⁴ Then shall they also answer him, saying, ‘Lord! when saw we thee a hungered, or athirst, or a stranger, or naked, or sick, or in prison, and did not minister unto thee?’ ⁴⁵ Then shall he answer them, saying, ‘Verily, I say unto you, ^lInasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to me.’ ⁴⁶ And ^m“these shall go away into everlasting punishment; but the righteous into life eternal.”

¹ “LET ² not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me. ³ In my Father’s house are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you. I ⁴ go to prepare a place for you; ⁵ and if I go and prepare a place for you, ‘I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that ⁶ where I am, there ye may be also. ⁷ And whither I go ye know, and the way ye know.”

⁸ Thomas saith unto him, “Lord, we know not whither thou goest; and how can we know the way?” ⁹ Jesus saith unto him, “I ‘am the Way, the Truth, and the Life; no man cometh unto the Father, but by me. ¹⁰ If ¹¹ ye had known me, ye should have known my Father also; and from henceforth ye know him, and have seen him.”

¹² Philip saith unto him, “Lord, show us the Father, and it sufficeth us.” ¹³ Jesus saith unto him, “Have I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not known me, Philip? ¹⁴ he that hath seen me hath seen the Father; and how sayest thou then, ‘Show us the Father?’ ¹⁵ Believest thou not that ¹⁶ I am in the Father, and the Father in me? the words that I speak unto you ¹⁷ I speak not of myself; but the Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works. ¹⁸ Believe me that I am in the Father, and the Father in me; ¹⁹ or else believe me for the very works’ sake. ²⁰ Verily, ²¹ verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my Father; ²² and ²³ whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son. ²⁴ If ye shall ask any thing in my name, I will do it.

²⁵ “If ²⁶ ye love me, keep my commandments: ²⁷ and I will pray the Father, and ²⁸ he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever, ²⁹ (even ³⁰ the Spirit of truth;) whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him; but ye know him; for he dwelleth with you, ³¹ and shall be in you. ³² I ³³ will not leave you ^{*}comfortless: I will come to you. ¹⁹ Yet a little while, and the world seeth me no more; but ^rye see me; because I live, ye shall live also. ²⁰ At that day ye shall know that ^sI am in my Father, and ye in me, and I in you. ²¹ He ^tthat hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me; and he that loveth me shall be loved of my Father; and I will love him, and will manifest myself to him."

²² Judas ^usaith unto him (not Iscariot), "Lord, how is it that thou wilt manifest thyself unto us, and not unto the world?" ²³ Jesus answered and said unto him, "If ^va man love me, he will keep my words; and my Father will love him, ^wand we will come unto him, and make our abode with him. ²⁴ He that loveth me not, keepeth not my sayings; and ^xthe word which ye hear is not mine, but the Father's which sent me. ²⁵ These things have I spoken unto you, being ^yyet present with you; ²⁶ but ^zthe Comforter (which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name), he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you. ²⁷ Peace ^aI leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you. ^bLet not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid. ²⁸ Ye have heard how ^cI said unto you, I go away, and come again unto you. If ye loved me, ye would rejoice, because [I said], ^dI go unto the Father; for my Father is greater than I. ²⁹ And ^enow I have told you before it come to pass, that, when it is come to pass, ye might believe.

³⁰ "Hereafter I will not talk much with you. ^fFor the prince of this world cometh, and hath nothing in me. ³¹ But that the world may know that I love the Father; and ^gas the Father gave me commandment, even so I do: arise, let us go hence." ⁱ

¹⁸ “If ^kthe world hate you, ye know that it hated me before it hated you. ¹⁹ If ^lye were of the world, the world would love his own; but ^mbecause ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you. ²⁰ Remember the word that I said unto you, ‘The ⁿservant is not greater than his lord.’ If they have persecuted me, they will also persecute you; ^oif they have kept my saying, they will keep yours also. ²¹ But ^pall these things will they do unto you for my Name’s sake, because they know not Him that sent me. ²² If ^qI had not come and spoken unto them, they had not had sin; ^rbut now they have no ^scloak for their sin. ²³ He ^tthat hateth me hateth my Father also. ²⁴ If I had not done among them ^uthe works which none other man did, they had not had sin; but now have they both seen and hated both me and my Father. ²⁵ But this cometh to pass, that the word might be fulfilled that is written in their Law, ‘They ^vhated me without a cause.’

⁵ “BUT now ^aI go my way to Him that sent me; and none of you asketh me, ‘Whither goest thou?’ ^bbut because I have said these things unto you, ^csorrow hath filled your heart. ⁷Nevertheless I tell you the truth—it is expedient for you that I go away. For if I go not away, ^dthe Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart, I will send Him unto you. ⁸And when He is come He will ^ereprove the world of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment. ⁹Of ^fsin, because they believe not on me; ¹⁰ of ^erighteousness, because I go to my Father, and ye see me no more; ¹¹ of ^fjudgment, because the prince of this world is judged. ¹² I have yet many things to say unto you, ^gbut ye cannot bear them now; ¹³ howbeit when He, ^hthe Spirit of Truth, is come, He will guide you into all truth. For He shall not speak of himself, but whatsoever He shall hear, that shall He speak, and He will show you things to come. ¹⁴ He shall glorify me; for He shall receive of mine, and shall show it unto you. ¹⁵ All ⁱthings that the Father hath are mine; therefore said I, that He shall take of mine, and show it unto you. ¹⁶ A ^jlittle while, and ye shall not see me; and again, a little while, and ye shall see me, ^kbecause I go to the Father."

¹⁷ Then said some of his disciples among themselves, "What is this that he saith unto us, 'A little while, and ye shall not see me; and again, a little while, and ye shall see me;' and, 'Because I go to the Father?'" ¹⁸ They said therefore, "What is this that he saith, 'A little while?' we cannot tell what he saith." ¹⁹ Now Jesus knew that they were desirous to ask him, and said unto them, "Do ye inquire among yourselves of that I said, 'A little while, and ye shall not see me;' and again, 'A little while, and ye shall see me?'" ²⁰ Verily, verily, I say unto you, That ye shall weep and lament, but the world shall rejoice; and ye shall be sorrowful, but your sorrow shall be turned into joy. ²¹ A ^lwoman when she is in travail hath sorrow, because her hour is come; but as soon as she is delivered of the child, she remembereth no more the anguish, for joy that a man is born into the world. ²² And ^mye now therefore have sorrow; but I will see you again, and ⁿyour heart shall rejoice, and your joy no man taketh from you; ²³ and in that day ye shall ask me nothing. ^oVerily, verily, I say unto you, Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my Name, He will give it you. ²⁴ Hitherto have ye asked nothing in my Name: ask, and ye shall receive, ^pthat your joy may be full.

²⁵ "These things have I spoken unto you in ^qproverbs; but the time cometh, when I shall no more speak unto you in ^rproverbs, but I shall show you plainly of the Father. ²⁶ At ^sthat day ye shall ask in my Name; and I say not unto you, that I will pray the Father for you; ²⁷ for ^tthe Father himself loveth you, because ye have loved me, and ^uhave believed that I came out from God. ²⁸ I ^vcame forth from the Father, and am come into the world; again, I leave the world, and go to the Father."

⁶“ I ⁱhave manifested thy Name unto the men ^jwhich thou gavest me out of the world. Thine they were, and Thou gavest them me ; and they have kept thy word. ⁷Now they have known that all things whatsoever Thou hast given me are of Thee ; ⁸for I have given unto them the words ^kwhich Thou gavest me ; and they have received them, ^land have known surely that I came out from Thee, and they have believed that Thou didst send me. ⁹I pray for them ; ^mI pray not for the world, but for them which Thou hast given me, for they are thine ; ¹⁰and all mine are thine, and ⁿthine are mine ; and I am glorified in them. ¹¹And ^onow I am no more in the world, but these are in the world, and I come to Thee. Holy Father ! ^pkeep, through thine own Name, those whom Thou hast given me, that they may be one, as we are. ¹²While I was with them in the world, ^qI kept them in thy Name, (those that Thou gavest me I have kept, and ^rnone of them is lost, but the Son of Perdition, that the Scripture might be fulfilled,) ¹³and now come I to Thee, and these things I speak in the world, that they might have my joy fulfilled in themselves.

¹⁴“ I ^shave given them thy word ; ^tand the world hath hated them, because they are not of the world, ^ueven as I am not of the world. ¹⁵I pray not that Thou shouldest take them out of the world, but ^vthat thou shouldest keep them from the evil. ¹⁶They ^ware not of the world, even as I am not of the world. ¹⁷Sanctify ^xthem through thy truth : ^ythy word is truth. ¹⁸As ^zThou hast sent me into the world, even so have I also sent them into the world. ¹⁹And ^afor their sakes I sanctify myself, that they also might be ^{*}sanctified through the truth.

²⁰“ Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word ; ²¹that ^bthey all may be one ; as Thou, Father, art in me, and I in Thee, that they also may be one in us ; that the world may believe that Thou hast sent me. ²²And the glory which Thou gavest me I have given them ; ^cthat they may be one, even as we are one ; ²³(I in them, and Thou in me) ; ^dthat they may be made perfect in one, and that the world may know that Thou hast sent me, and hast loved them, as Thou hast loved me.

²⁴“ Father ! I will that they also, whom Thou hast given me, be with me where I am ; that they may behold my glory, which Thou hast given me, ^efor Thou lovedest me before the foundation of the world. ²⁵O righteous Father ! ^fthe world hath not known Thee ; but ^gI have known Thee, and these have known That thou hast sent me ; ²⁶and ^hI have declared unto them thy Name, and will declare it ; that the love ⁱwherewith Thou hast loved me may be in them, and I in them.”

SECTION I.—Joseph of Arimathæa and Nicodemus bury the Body of Christ.

MATT. xxvii. 57–60.—MARK xv. 42–46.—LUKE xxiii. 50–54.—JOHN xix. 38, to the end.

¹ John xix. 38. ¹ AND after this, ² when the even was come,^a because it was the Preparation (that is, the day before the Sabbath), ³ there came a rich man of Arimathæa, ⁴ a city of the Jews, ⁵ named Joseph, ⁶ an honorable counsellor; ⁷ and he was a good man, and a just; ⁸ who also himself waited for the kingdom of God; ⁹ being a disciple of Jesus, but secretly, ^afor fear of the Jews, ¹⁰ (the same had not consented to the counsel and deed of them;) ¹¹ this man ¹² came, and went in boldly unto Pilate, and craved the body of Jesus; ¹³ [and] besought Pilate, that he might take away the body of Jesus. ¹⁴ And Pilate marvelled if he were already dead; and calling unto him the centurion, he asked him whether he had been any while dead? ¹⁵ And when he knew it of the centurion, ¹⁶ Pilate gave him leave; [and] ¹⁷ commanded the body to be delivered ¹⁸ to Joseph.^b ¹⁹ And he bought fine linen, and ²⁰ he came therefore, and took the body of Jesus. ²¹ And when Joseph had taken the body, he wrapped it in a clean linen cloth; ²² and there came also ^bNicodemus (which at the first came to Jesus by night), and brought a mixture of myrrh and aloes, about an hundred pound weight. ²³ Then took they the body of Jesus, and ^cwound it in clean linen clothes with the spices, as the manner of the Jews is to bury. ²⁴ Now in the place where he was crucified there was a garden, and in the garden a new sepulchre; ²⁵ and [Joseph] ^dlaid it in his own new tomb, which he had hewn out in the^c rock, ²⁶ wherein was never man yet laid. ²⁷ There laid they Jesus therefore, because of the Jews' Preparation day; for the sepulchre was nigh at hand. ²⁸ And that day was the Preparation, and the Sabbath drew on; ²⁹ and he rolled a great stone to the door of the sepulchre, and departed.

JOHN XXI. 1-24.

¹ AFTER these things, Jesus showed himself again to the disciples at the sea of Tiberias. And on this wise showed he himself. ² There were together Simon Peter, and Thomas called Didymus, and ^aNathanael of Cana in Galilee, and ^bthe sons of Zebedee, and two other of his disciples. ³ Simon Peter saith unto them, "I go a fishing." They say unto him, "We also go with thee." They went forth, and entered into a ship immediately, and that night they caught nothing.
⁴ But when the morning was now come, Jesus stood on the shore;
but the disciples ^cknew not that it was Jesus. ⁵ Then ^dJesus saith unto them, "^{*}Children, have ye any meat?" They answered him, " No." ⁶ And he said unto them, "Cast ^ethe net on the right side of the ship, and ye shall find." They cast therefore, and now they were not able to draw it for the multitude of fishes. ⁷ Therefore ^fthat disciple whom Jesus loved saith unto Peter, "It is the Lord!" Now when Simon Peter heard that it was the Lord, he girt his fisher's coat unto him (for he was naked), and did cast himself into the sea. ⁸ And the other disciples came in a little ship (for they were not far from land, but as it were two hundred cubits), dragging the net with fishes.
⁹ As soon then as they were come to land, they saw a fire of coals
there, and fish laid thereon, and bread. ¹⁰ Jesus saith unto them, "Bring of the fish which ye have now caught." ¹¹ Simon Peter went up, and drew the net to land full of great fishes, an hundred and fifty and three; and for all there were so many, yet was not the net broken.
¹² Jesus saith unto them, "Come ^gand dine." And none of the disciples durst ask him, Who art thou? knowing that it was the Lord.
¹³ Jesus then cometh, and taketh bread, and giveth them, and fish likewise. ¹⁴ This is now ^hthe third time^o that Jesus showed himself to his disciples, after that he was risen from the dead.

son of Jonas, lovest thou me more than these?" He saith unto him, “Yea Lord, thou knowest that I love thee.” He saith unto him, “Feed my lambs.” ¹⁶ He saith to him again the second time, “Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me?” He saith unto him, “Yea, Lord, thou knowest that I love thee.” He saith unto him, “Feed my sheep.” ¹⁷ He saith unto him, the third time, “Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me?” Peter was grieved because he said unto him the third time, “Lovest thou me?” and he said unto him, “Lord, thou knowest all things; thou knowest that I love thee.” Jesus saith unto him, “Feed my sheep.” ¹⁸ Verily, ^k verily, I say unto thee, When thou wast young, thou girdedst thyself, and walkedst whither thou wouldest; but when thou shalt be old, thou shalt stretch forth thy hands, and another shall gird thee,^p and carry thee whither thou wouldest not.” ¹⁹ This spake he, signifying ^l by what death he should glorify God. And when he had spoken this, he saith unto him, “Follow me.” ²⁰ Then Peter, turning about, seeth the disciple ^m whom Jesus loved following (which also leaned on his breast at supper, and said, “Lord, which is he that betrayeth thee?”) ²¹ Peter seeing him saith to Jesus, “Lord, and what shall this man do?” ²² Jesus saith unto him, “If I will that he tarry ⁿ till I come, what is that to thee? follow thou me.” ²³ Then went this saying abroad among the brethren, that that disciple should not die. Yet Jesus said not unto him, He shall not die; but, “If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee?” ²⁴ This is the disciple which testifieth of these things, and wrote these things; and ^o we know that his testimony is true.

PART IX.

FROM THE ASCENSION OF CHRIST TO THE TERMINATION OF THE PERIOD
IN WHICH THE GOSPEL WAS PREACHED TO THE PROSELYTES OF RIGHTEOUSNESS, AND TO THE JEWS ONLY.

PRELIMINARY OBSERVATIONS.

HAVING thus far proceeded through the magnificent temple of the Christian religion, till we have arrived at that holy altar on which the Great Sacrifice was offered, we are about to contemplate the wonderful gift of the Holy Spirit which the now-glorified Victim sent down from the Holy of Holies. We will pause, however, at the threshold of the rising Church, and appeal to all who have hitherto refused to enter in and worship, if they have been able to discover any God so worthy of their homage, as the God of Christianity; or any temple so firmly established as this beautiful fabric of eternal truth. The Christian challenges the world to produce another system which is at all comparable to Christianity, in the evidences of its truth, the purity of its precepts, the philosophy of its discoveries, both concerning God and man; or in all the other essential qualities which the speculations, the fancy, or the sober reason of the reflecting or the learned in all ages have considered essential to any proposed scheme of religion. The Christian world have hitherto been, for the most part, too patient under the repeated attacks of their antagonists. They have been contented with defence, and with maintaining the walls of their fortress; in replying to, rather than assailing the enemies of their sublime and holy faith. It is true that one considerable advantage has accrued to the cause of truth from this plan of action. Every argument which sophistry has been able to invent, and ignorance or vice to advance, has been fully and fairly met, discussed, and refuted. The external and internal evidence of Christianity has been so amply displayed—the facts on which the whole system rests have been so ably and repeatedly established, that no possible danger can be apprehended, if the Church of God continues its vigilance, from any future efforts of the great adversary of mankind. The danger to which alone it is exposed, is the offence which arises from the negligent lives of its professed followers, or their too indolent security in the goodness of their cause.

Let us then leave for a short time the impregnable walls of the Christian truth, and make our incursion into the entrenched camp of the enemy. Let us at once inquire who are these proud boasters who have so long encouraged themselves in their empty blasphemies against the light of Revelation? What are their claims to our veneration? What are their discoveries? What will they substitute in the place of Christianity? Where is to be found a complete and perfect system of truth and morals among these pretended illuminators of the human race? I appeal to the records of all ages for an answer, and implore the impartial inquirer to search into the history of all nations, in all periods from the day of the creation to the present moment, and see whether human reason has been able to frame a consistent religion for itself. If the same one, only true religion, which is revealed in Scripture under the three several forms of the Patriarchal, Levitical, and Christian dispensations, had been withheld from the world, have we any reason whatever to suppose, that its advantages could have been supplied to the world by any human discovery?

One thing only is necessary to be premised—the Christian in this great controversy appeals to facts, experience, and history. While he shrinks from no abstract reasoning, from no metaphysical inquiry, from no supposed philosophical deductions, he asserts that his religion is established throughout upon divinely-attested and undeniable facts. He demands only of the opponents of Christianity, that the religion they would establish in its place be founded upon facts equally well attested, and upon evidences equally satisfactory and undeniable.

It is certain that evil is every where around us. It is concealed in our hearts within—it is visible in our bodies without, in a countless train of infirmities, diseases, and afflictions. It is seen above us in the storms of heaven, around us in the evils of life, and beneath us in the graves of the dead.

The question, Whence and why is evil permitted in this world? baffles all but the Christian. If God could prevent evil and did not, where is his benevolence? if he wished to prevent evil, and could not, where is his power? Here the infidel is baffled, and his proud reason stayed. Reason without Revelation has not solved, and cannot solve, the dark and mysterious difficulty. Christianity alone unfolds to man the origin of evil in this world, and while it explains the cause, appoints the remedy. “An enemy hath done this,”—and “the seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent’s head.” We are assured that an evil and malignant spirit, superior to man, influenced the mind of man to an act of disobedience. This is the recorded fact, and daily experience confirms its reasonableness and probability. Evil is still continued by the same means by which it originated. Thousands are hourly misled by one powerful or depraved mind. The sophistries of infidelity, the splendor of ambition, the gold of avarice are demons all pointing to the forbidden fruit—to a transgression of the sacred Law: and the authority of custom, the fear of ridicule, the false shame of the cowardice that dares not differ from the multitude, are all the enemies of our virtue, and poisoners of our happiness. Man tempts man to sin: if wicked men, ambitious conquerors, &c. can continue the dominion of evil solely from their superiority of talent (and such has been in every age the history of crime); if their own habits of evil were induced by the prior example of others acting upon minds liable to sin; is it irrational to believe that the influence and mental superiority of an Evil Being originated the first crime that contaminated the human race? The causes which continue evil may naturally be supposed to bear some analogy to the cause which primarily produced it; and no cause is more probable than the influence of mental superiority over a mind capable of error, and endowed with the liberty of choice. Hence we find, “that they who remain in the state in which the fall left them are called the children of the devil; and it is their pleasure to propagate that sin and death which their father introduced. As he was a liar from the beginning, so they are liars against God, as well as man; he was a murderer, and they are murderers; he was a tempter, a deceiver, a subtle serpent, a devouring lion; and their works, like his, abound with deceit, enmity, subtlety, avarice, and rapacity. There have been two parties from the beginning—the sons of God, and the seed of the serpent. Their opinions are contrary, and their works contrary. Christianity is at the head of one party, and infidelity at the head of the other. As time is divided into light and darkness, so is the world between these two. The dispute between them has subsisted throughout all ages past, it is now in agitation, and it will never cease till the consummation, when the Judge of men and angels shall interpose to decide it^a.”

We are called upon to believe rather than to fathom these depths of Omnipotence; and we know and are assured, that the two great works of the Destroyer, sin and death, shall be finally annihilated by the Saviour of mankind, who was revealed from the beginning as the conqueror of evil.

But what are the discoveries of infidelity which could supersede this religion? What philosopher in ancient days, or what speculator in modern times, who has dared to reject that account of the origin of evil in the world which is given us in revelation, has been able for one moment to propose any satisfactory explanation of this great mystery; or offer any thing either to allay its bitterness, or to remove its sting? All is wild and vain conjecture: they know only that evil exists, and they have no remedy whatever for the melancholy conviction, but a gloomy patience without hope of future good, or deliverance from present sorrow.

Shall we go on to the next great event after the birth of the world? The testimony of Revelation has sometimes been rejected in this question also. If, however, the discoveries of our present eminent geologist, and the conclusions of scientific or curious observers, both at home and abroad, may be received as arguments, there is sufficient evidence to assure us that at no very remote period a universal deluge overspread the whole surface of the globe, the traces of which are every where distinguishable. The traditions of all nations confirm the same truth. Their records in no one instance proceed higher than this event; the chronology of the Egyptians, and of the Hindoos, which boasted a more ancient descent, have been long since consigned to oblivion. Let me then ask, Whether any invention of natural religion, that vain idol of the imagination, can discover an adequate cause of this universal deluge; or does tradition relate any thing concerning it, which does not confirm the only rational and consistent account which is revealed to us in Scripture^b? There is abundant evidence to prove that the most absurd and superstitious ceremonies, and the most inconsistent and irrational theories of the pagan world were at first useful emblems or remembrances instituted in commemoration of this great event, though they were subsequently perverted; and every species of idolatry, from the Hindoo to the savage, originated in the corruption of some primeval truth revealed to their patriarchal ancestors^c.

On this view of the subject, every difficulty respecting the polytheism of antiquity is solved. All the mystery of its early origin, and the causes of the institution of barbarous rites and absurd notions respecting the Deity, are easily and satisfactorily explained. Let him, who rejects Revelation, and yet believes in the power of the unassisted reason of man to frame for itself a consistent system of rational religion, contemplate the history of his species, and account for the incomprehensible series of mysterious absurdities he there surveys. Was it not the real, genuine, undoubted majesty of human reason which fully displayed itself when the scientific Chaldean paid his homage to fire, as to a God—when the dignified Persian bowed down to the host of heaven—and the deeply-learned Egyptian acknowledged the divinity of the reptile or the vegetable? If the advocate of the supremacy of human reason would be further gratified, I would refer him to the contemplation of the more northern nations, and bid him there behold its triumphs in the massacre of human victims, when the blood-bedewed priest, as in the plains of Mexico, in a subsequent period, tore the palpitating heart from the still living breast of the sacrifice, and spoke in his mystic augury the will of a ferocious deity. Human reason proposed the worship of the sword of God, Attila, and revelled in the banquet of those warriors, who drank mead from the skulls of their enemies in the halls of Valhalla. Human reason, unencumbered by Revelation, gradually instructed the passive population of Hindostan to burn their widows, to murder their infants, and to torture their own bodies. Cruelty, lust, and ignorance assumed the place of repentance, faith, and knowledge; and the conquest of unassisted reason over the mind of man, was consummated in the golden clime of India, till the white horse of Brunswick pastured on its fair meadows, and the sons of Japhet forsook the shores of England to overthrow this proud temple of the idol god.

We will now consider human reason in its most admired form in the schools of philosophy in Greece, of which the Pythagorean or Italic was the most distinguished for the reasonableness of its doctrines, the purity of its precepts, and the excellence of its discipline. Among the Pythagoreans was taught the existence of a Supreme Being, the Creator, and providential Preserver of the Universe, the immortality of the soul, and future rewards and punishments. Though these opinions were blended with many sentiments which are not warranted by Revelation, there is certainly much to be admired and wondered at in the systems of Pythagoras. Yet even here, if the advocates of the sufficiency of human intellect should feel inclined to triumph, they must do so upon Christian principles only; for it is demonstrable that this great philosopher kindled his faint taper at the ever-burning fire on the holy altar of truth. He conversed, we have reason to believe, with those favored people who held in their hands the sacred records of Moses and the prophets. For Pythagoras, it is asserted by all the remaining evidence, travelled among the Jews in their dispersion, both in Egypt and in Babylon, and also with the remnant of them who were left in their own country at Mount Carmel. Before he proceeded on these travels he visited Thales, at Miletus, who happened to be in Egypt at the time when Jehoahaz was brought there a prisoner of war by Pharaoh-Necho^d, with many of his captive countrymen; and these were the two men who founded the Ionic and Italic schools, from which descended all the schools of philosophy in Greece. Their predecessors had by no means such clear ideas of a Supreme God and a Superintending Providence; and the reason seems to be, that they had no communication with the depositaries of truth, but were embarrassed with the mixed traditions of ancient times, and the stupid idolatry of their own days. Socrates and Plato were the two principal philosophers who next distinguished themselves by their superiority to their countrymen. These seem to have been permitted to show to the world to what height of excellence the intellect of man could attain without the possession of the Inspired Volume. Both taught the existence of one God, though both practised the worship of the numerous gods of their country. And such is the superiority of Revelation, that a little child, of our own day, who has been made acquainted with the common truths of Christianity, is a wiser philosopher than either of them.

^b That which the modern speculators call natural religion is the offspring of cultivated minds, thoroughly imbued with an early and extensive knowledge of religion, and endeavouring, by subtle distinctions, to separate the doctrines and duties which could only have been known by Revelation, from those which they suppose to be discoverable by the power of human reason only. After all the reasonings of Wollaston, Clarke, and others on this subject, the only point of real importance has been disregarded. The question is, Whether there has ever been found a nation who has been governed by natural religion? or, Whether this natural religion has made any discoveries concerning God, or the soul of man, or the nature of the future world, or on any of these sublimer subjects, which are at all comparable to those which are given to us in Revelation. Natural religion, says Faber, denotes that religion which man might frame to himself by the unassisted exercise of his intellectual powers, if he were placed in the world by his Creator, without any communication being made to him relative to that Creator's will and attributes.—Faber On the Three Dispensations, vol. i. p. 74.

If, then, the learned, deeply-reasoning, and talented Greek was not able, by his own powers of reasoning, to frame any consistent code of religion by which to govern himself, or to benefit mankind, much less shall we find that the more modern philosophers, who have ventured to reject Christianity, are more perfect guides, or are favored with greater discernment. Shall we, for instance, follow Lord Herbert of Cherbury, who assures us that the indulgence of the passions is no greater crime than the quenching of thirst, or yielding to sleep?—Or shall we believe, with Mr. Hobbes, that inspiration is madness, and religion ridiculous, and that the civil law of a country is the only criterion of right and wrong?—Shall we agree with Blount, the disappointed, self-possessed suicide, that the soul is material?—Or with Lord Shaftesbury, that the Scriptures are an artful invention, that the idea of salvation is absurd, and join in his untranscribable blasphemies against the meek and blameless Jesus? Shall the Jew Spinoza direct us, when he teaches us that God is the soul of the world and not the ruler; and that all things proceed, not from the will or government of an All-wise Creator, but from a necessary emanation from the physical energy of the material universe, the passive fountain of existence? Shall we agree with him that there is no Creator, no providence, no necessity for worship, nor any well-grounded expectation of a future state?—Or shall we rather become the votaries of Collins, and believe that man is a mere machine, and the soul is material and mortal?—Or praise, with Tindal and Morgan, and Chubb and Bolingbroke, the dignity of reason, the excellence of natural religion, professing to admire Christianity, while we deny its doctrines and ridicule its truths?—If these hierophants are not received as our guides into the temple of their natural religion, shall we turn to Gibbon, to pander to our frailties, and lead us to the shrine of vice, “a worthy priest, where satyrs are the gods?”—Or shall we rather submit our intellects to the wisdom of Hume, to learn from him that we cannot reason from cause and effect, and therefore (oh sublime discovery!) the beauty of the visible creation does not prove the existence of God? or, that experience is our only guide, and therefore miracles are impossible, and not to be credited on any evidence whatever! If these lights of the world are not to have the honor of conducting us, shall we rather barter our veneration for the Christian Scriptures, for the reveries of Drummond, who would change the Bible into an almanac; or the still worthier votaries of infidelity, who are alike distinguished from their countrymen by the double infamy of their politics and their religion? The good principles of England have rejected the teaching of such men with scorn and contempt. “The ethereal light has purged off its baser fire victorious.” Not even their names shall pollute my pages. In other lands, the follies of the rejectors of Revelation have been known in the misery of millions. These were the men, who, professing themselves wise, became indeed fools. God, with them, was the sensorium of the universe, or the intelligent principle of nature. They rejected, therefore, all idea of a Providence, and a moral Governor of the world. They ascribed every effect to fate or fortune, to necessity or chance; they denied the existence of a soul distinct from the body; they conceived man to be nothing more than an organized lump of matter, a mere machine, an ingenious piece of clock-work, which, when the wheels refuse to act, stands still, and loses all power and motion for ever. They acknowledged nothing beyond the grave; no resurrection, no future existence, no future retribution; they considered death as an eternal sleep, as the total extinction of our being; and they stigmatized all opinions different from these with the name of superstition, bigotry, priestcraft, fanaticism, and idolatry^e.

Let us now advert, for a moment, to the effects produced by these principles on an entire people, and also on individuals^f. The only instance in which the avowed rejectors of Revelation have possessed the supreme power and government of a country, and have attempted to dispose of human happiness according to their own doctrines and wishes, is that of France during the greater part of the revolution, which it is now well known was effected by the abettors of infidelity. The great majority of the nation had become infidels. The name and profession of Christianity was renounced by the legislature. Death was declared, by an act of the republican government, to be an eternal sleep. Public worship was abolished. The churches were converted into "temples of reason," in which atheistical and licentious homilies were substituted for the proscribed service; and an absurd and ludicrous imitation of the pagan mythology was exhibited, under the title of the Religion of Reason. In the principal church of every town a tutelary goddess was installed, with a ceremony equally pedantic, frivolous, and profane; and the females selected to personify this new divinity were mostly prostitutes, who received the adorations of the attendant municipal officers, and of the multitudes, whom fear, or force, or motives of gain, had collected together on the occasion. Contempt for religion, or decency, became the test of attachment to the government; and the gross infraction of any moral or social duty was deemed a proof of civism, and a victory over prejudice. All distinctions of right and wrong were confounded. The grossest debauchery triumphed. Then proscription followed upon proscription, tragedy followed after tragedy, in almost breathless succession, on the theatre of France; the whole nation seemed to be converted into a horde of assassins. Democracy and atheism, hand in hand, desolated the country, and converted it into one vast field of rapine and of blood. The moral and social ties were unloosed, or rather torn asunder. For a man to accuse his own father was declared to be an act of civism worthy of a true republican; and to neglect it was pronounced a crime that should be punished with death. Accordingly women denounced their husbands, and mothers their sons, as bad citizens and traitors. While many women—not of the dress of the common people, nor of infamous reputation, but respectable in character and appearance—seized with savage ferocity between their teeth the mangled limbs of their murdered countrymen. The miseries suffered by that single nation have changed all the histories of the preceding sufferings of mankind into idle tales. The kingdom appeared to be changed into one great prison; the inhabitants converted into felons; and the common doom of man commuted for the violence of the sword and the bayonet, the sucking boat and the guillotine. To contemplative men it seemed, for a season, as if the knell of the whole nation was tolled, and the world summoned to its execution and its funeral. Within the short space of ten years not less than three millions of human beings are supposed to have perished in that single country, by the influence of atheism, and the legislature of infidelity. I well know it will be thought by many, that this part of the subject has been exhausted. But, in one sense, it can never be exhausted. The fearful warnings of that dreadful revolution ought to be indelibly impressed upon society, so long as a sovereign, or a state, remains in the civilized world.

Thus it appears that man has never yet been able, by the mere light of nature to attain to a competent knowledge of religious truth. Let us now take a different view of the subject, and endeavour to show, by arguments of another kind, how impossible it is for him to lay any foundation for such knowledge, other than that which is already laid in the revealed will of God.

From a consideration of the powers and faculties of the human understanding, it is demonstrable that it cannot attain to knowledge of any kind without some external communication. It cannot perceive unless the impression be made on the organs of perception; it cannot form ideas without perceptions; it cannot judge without a comparison of ideas; it cannot form a proposition without this exercise of its judgment; it cannot reason, argue, or syllogize, without this previous formation of propositions to be examined and compared. Such is the procedure of the human understanding in the work of ratiocination; whence it clearly follows that it can, in the first instance, do nothing of itself; that is, it cannot begin its operations till it be supplied with the materials to work upon, which materials must come from without; and that the mind, unfurnished with these, is incapable of attaining even to the lowest degree of knowledge.

Without Revelation, therefore, it is certain that man never could have discovered the mind or will of God, or have obtained any knowledge of spiritual things. That he never did attain to it appears from a fair and impartial statement of the condition of the heathen world before the preaching of Christianity, and of the condition of barbarous and uncivilized countries at the present moment. That he could never attain to it is proved by showing that human reason, unenlightened by Revelation, has no foundation on which to construct a solid system of religion; that all human knowledge is derived from external communications, and conveyed either through the medium of the senses, or immediately by divine inspiration; that those ideas which are formed in the mind through the medium of the senses can communicate no knowledge of spiritual things; and that, consequently, for this knowledge he must be indebted wholly to Divine Revelation⁶.

If, then, we find, from the very nature of man, as well as from the records of all history, that he has never been able to invent for himself a consistent scheme of religion ; if his human reason is utterly incapable of arriving at any satisfactory conclusions respecting God and his Providence, the nature of the soul, or his own destiny in another state—if all his ideas on these subjects are clearly traceable to Revelation, and as soon as he steps over this boundary he launches at once into the chaos of conjecture and uncertainty ; we have the most undoubted evidence in our favor, to prove that Revelation was necessary to man, and that he is unable of himself to discover those interesting and important truths which relate both to his present and future existence ; and the decided superiority of Revelation over every other system which the ingenuity or sagacity of man has either invented or proposed is the hallowed and ratifying seal of its divine origin. Who, then, will yet refuse to enter this holy temple of Christianity ? who will still reject the religion of Christ, for infidel philosophy and metaphysical uncertainty—for endless and useless theories—for premises without conclusions—death without hope—and a God, without other proofs of his mercy than he has bestowed alike upon the beasts of the field and the fowls of the air ?

²⁹ Men and brethren! ^{*}let me freely speak unto you ^oof the patriarch David, that he is both dead and buried, and his sepulchre is with us unto this day. ³⁰ Therefore being a prophet, ^pand knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his loins, [according to the flesh, he would raise up Christ] to sit on his throne; ³¹ he, seeing this before, spake of the resurrection of Christ, that ‘[^qhis soul] was not left in hell, neither his flesh did see corruption.’ ³² This ^rJesus hath God raised up, ^swhereof we all are witnesses. ³³ Therefore ‘being by the right hand of God exalted, and ^thaving received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, he ^uhath shed forth this, which ye now see and hear.’ ³⁴ For David is not ascended into the heavens; but he saith himself,—

ACTS vi. 1-6.

¹ Then said the high priest, "Are these things so?" ² And he said, "Men, ^abrethren, and fathers, hearken! ¹ The God of glory appeared unto our father Abraham, when he was in Mesopotamia, before he dwelt in Charran, ³ and said unto him, 'Get ^bthee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and come into the land which I shall show thee.' ⁴ Then ^ccame he out of the land of the Chaldeans, and dwelt in Charran; and from thence, when his father was dead, he removed him into this land, wherein ye now dwell; ⁵ and He gave him none inheritance in it, no, not so much as to set his foot on; ^dyet He promised that He would give it to him for a possession, and to his seed after him, when, as yet he had no child. ⁶ And God spake on this wise, 'That his seed should sojourn in a strange land; and that they should bring them into bondage, and entreat them evil ^efour hundred years.' ^m ⁷ And the nation to whom they shall be in bondage will I judge, said God; and after that shall they come forth, and ^eserve Me in this place.

and he made him governor over Egypt and all his house. ¹¹ Now ^othere came a dearth over all the land of Egypt and Chanaan, and great affliction; and our fathers found no sustenance. ¹² But ^pwhen Jacob heard that there was corn in Egypt, he sent out our fathers first; ¹³ and ^qat the second time Joseph was made known to his brethren, and Joseph's kindred was made known unto Pharaoh. ¹⁴ Then ^rsent Joseph, and called his father Jacob to him, and all [his] ^skindred, three-score and fifteen souls. ¹⁵ So ^t'Jacob went down into Egypt, ^uand died, he, and our fathers. ¹⁶ And ^vwere carried over into Sychem, and laid in ^wthe sepulchre that Abraham bought for a sum of money of the sons of Emmor the father of Sychem.)ⁿ

²⁰ " In ^awhich time Moses was born, and ^bwas ^{*}exceeding fair, and nourished up in [his] father's house three months. ²¹ And ^cwhen he was cast out, Pharaoh's daughter took him up, and nourished him for her own son. ²² And Moses was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians; and was ^dmighty in words and in deeds. ²³ And ^ewhen he was full forty years old, it came into his heart to visit his brethren the children of Israel. ²⁴ And seeing one of them suffer wrong, he defended him, and avenged him that was oppressed, and smote the Egyptian. ²⁵ †For he supposed his brethren would have understood how that God by his hand would deliver them; but they understood not. ²⁶ And ^fthe next day he showed himself unto them as they strove, and would have set them at one again, saying, 'Sirs, ye are brethren! why do ye wrong one to another?' ²⁷ But he that did his neighbour wrong thrust him away, saying, 'Who ^gmade thee a ruler and a judge over us?' ²⁸ Wilt thou kill me, as thou didst the Egyptian yesterday?' ²⁹ Then ^hfled Moses at this saying, and was a stranger in the land of Madian, where he begat two sons.

³⁵ " This Moses whom they refused, (saying, 'Who made thee a ruler and a judge?') the same did God send to be a ruler and a deliverer ^mby the hand of the Angel which appeared to him in the bush. ³⁶ He ⁿbrought them out, after that he had ^oshowed wonders and signs in the land of Egypt, ^pand in the Red Sea, ^qand in the wilderness forty years.

³⁷ " This is that Moses which said unto the children of Israel, 'A ^rProphet shall the Lord [your] God raise up unto you of your brethren, ^slike unto me; ^thim shall ye hear.' ³⁸ This ^uis He that was in the Church in the wilderness with ^vthe Angel which spake to him in the Mount Sina, and with our fathers, ^wwho received the lively ^xoracles to give unto us; ³⁹ to whom our fathers would not obey, but thrust him from them, and in their hearts turned back again into Egypt, ⁴⁰ saying ²⁶ AND the Angel of the Lord spake unto Philip, saying, "Arise, and go toward the south unto the way that goeth down from Jerusalem unto Gaza. ^bWhich is desert." ²⁷ And he arose and went: and, behold! ^aa man of Ethiopia, a ^ceunuch of great authority under Candace, queen of the Ethiopians, who had the charge of all her treasure, and ^bhad come to Jerusalem for to worship, ²⁸ was returning, and sitting in his chariot read Esaias the prophet. ²⁹ Then the Spirit said unto Philip, "Go near, and join thyself to this chariot." ³⁰ And Philip ran thither to him, and heard him read the prophet Esaias, and said, "Understandest thou what thou readest?" ³¹ And he said, "How can I, except some man should guide me?" And he answered, and said, "I ^gbelieve that Jesus Christ is the Son of God!"] ³⁸ And he commanded the chariot to stand still; and they went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch: and he baptized him. ³⁹ And when they were come up out of the water, ^hthe Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip; ⁱthat the eunuch saw him no more, and he went on his way rejoicing. ⁴⁰ But Philip was found at Azotus; and passing through he preached in all the cities, till he came to Cæsarea.

ACTS ix. 10-18, and beginning of 19.

¹⁰ AND there was a certain disciple at Damascus, ^anamed Ananias; and to him said the Lord in a vision, "Ananias!" And he said, "Behold! I am here, Lord!" ¹¹ And the Lord said unto him, "Arise, and go into the street which is called Straight, and inquire in the house of Judas for one called Saul, ^bof Tarsus; for, behold! he prayeth, ¹² and hath seen in a vision a man named Ananias coming in, and putting his hand on him, that he might receive his sight." ¹³ Then Ananias answered, "Lord, I have heard by many of this man, 'how much evil he hath done to thy saints at Jerusalem. ¹⁴ And here he hath authority from the Chief Priests to bind all ^dthat call on thy Name." ¹⁵ But the Lord said unto him, "Go thy way, for 'he is a chosen vessel^t unto Me, to bear my Name before ^rthe Gentiles, and ^ekings, and the children of Israel. ¹⁶ For ^hI will show him how great things he must suffer for my Name's sake."

¹ AND the apostles and brethren that were in Judæa heard that the Gentiles had also received the word of God. ² And when Peter was come up to Jerusalem, ^athey that were of the Circumcision contended with him, ³ saying, “Thou ^bwentest in to men uncircumcised, ^cand didst eat with them.”
⁴ But Peter rehearsed the matter from the beginning, and expounded it ^dby order unto them, saying, ⁵ “I ^ewas in the city of Joppa praying: and in a trance, I saw a vision, A certain vessel descend, as it had been a great sheet, let down from heaven by four corners; and it came even to me; ⁶ upon the which when I had fastened mine eyes, I considered, and saw fourfooted beasts of the earth, and wild beasts, and creeping things, and fowls of the air. ⁷ And I heard a voice saying unto me, ‘Arise, Peter! slay and eat!’ ⁸ But I said, ‘Not so, Lord! for nothing common or unclean hath at any time entered into my mouth.’ ⁹ But the voice answered me again from heaven, ‘What God hath cleansed, that call not thou common.’ ¹⁰ And this was done three times: and all were drawn up again into heaven. ¹¹ And, behold! immediately there were three men already come unto the house where I was, sent from Cæsarea unto me. ¹² And ^fthe Spirit bade me go with them, nothing doubting; moreover ^gthese six brethren accompanied me, and we entered into the man’s house. ¹³ And ^hhe showed us how he had seen an angel in his house, which stood and said unto him, ‘Send [men] to Joppa, and call for Simon, whose surname is Peter; ¹⁴ who shall tell thee words, whereby thou and all thy house shall be saved.’ ¹⁵ And as I began to speak, the Holy Ghost fell on them, ⁱas on us at the beginning. ¹⁶ Then remembered I the word of the Lord, how that he said, ‘John, ^jindeed, baptized with water; but ^kye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost.’ ¹⁷ Forasmuch ^lthen as God gave them the like gift as he did unto us, who believed on the Lord Jesus Christ; ^mwhat was I, that I could withstand God?”
¹⁸ When they heard these things, they held their peace, and glorified God, saying, “Then ⁿhath God also to the Gentiles granted repentance unto life!”

† Or, to ask who was there.

when she knew Peter's voice, she opened not the gate for gladness, but ran in, and told how Peter stood before the gate. ¹⁵ And they said unto her, "Thou art mad!" But she constantly affirmed that it was even so. Then said they, "It ^mis his angel." ¹⁶ But Peter continued knocking; and when they had opened the door, and saw him, they were astonished. ¹⁷ But he, "beckoning unto them with the hand to hold their peace, declared unto them how the Lord had brought him out of the prison. And he said, "Go, show these things unto James, and to the brethren." And he departed, and went into another place.^m

¹⁸ Now as soon as it was day, there was no small stir among the soldiers, what was become of Peter. ¹⁹ And when Herod had sought for him, and found him not, he examined the keepers, and commanded that they should be put to death.

SECTION X.—*The Converts at Antioch, being forewarned by Agabus, send relief to their Brethren at Jerusalem, by the hands of Barnabas and Saul.*ⁿ ACTS xi. 27, to the end.

²⁷ AND in these days came ^aprophets ^ofrom Jerusalem unto Antioch. ²⁸ And there stood up one of them named ^bAgabus, and signified by the Spirit that there should be great dearth throughout all the world: which came to pass in the days of Claudius [Cæsar]. ²⁹ Then the disciples, every man according to his ability, determined to send ^crelief unto the brethren which dwelt in Judæa; ³⁰ which ^dalso they did, and sent it to the elders^p by the hands of Barnabas and Saul.

SECTION XI.—The Death of Herod Agrippa.

ACTS xii. latter part of ver. 19, and ver. 20-23.

¹⁹ AND ^ahe went down from Judæa to Cæsarea, and there abode. ²⁰ And [Herod] ^{*}was highly displeased with them of Tyre and Sidon: but they came with one accord to him, and, having made Blastus [†]the king's chamberlain their friend, desired peace; because ^btheir country was nourished by the king's country. ²¹ And upon a set day Herod, arrayed in royal apparel, sat upon his throne, and made an oration unto them. ²² And the people gave a shout, saying, "It is the voice of a god, and not of a man!" ²³ And immediately the Angel of the Lord ^csmote him, because ^dhe gave not God the glory: and he was eaten of worms, and gave up the ghost.^q

Who called for Barnabas and Saul, and desired to hear the word of God. ⁸ But ^eElymas^c the sorcerer (for so is his name by interpretation) withstood them, seeking to turn away the deputy from the faith. ⁹ Then Saul (who also is called ^dPaul), ^ffilled with the Holy Ghost, set his eyes on him, ¹⁰ and said, "O full of all subtilty and all mischief, ^g*thou* child of the Devil, thou enemy of all righteousness! thou wilt not cease to pervert the right ways of the Lord;^h ¹¹ and now, behold! ⁱthe hand of the Lord is upon thee, and thou shalt be blind, not seeing the sun for a season." Now when Paul and his company loosed from Paphos, they came to Perga in Pamphylia. And ^aJohn departing from them returned to Jerusalem.

SECTION V.—From Perga to Antioch in Pisidia—Paul, according to his custom, first preaches to the Jews—They are driven out of Antioch.

ACTS xiii. 14-50.

¹⁴ BUT when they departed from Perga, they came to Antioch in Pisidia, and "went into the synagogue on the Sabbath day,^e and sat down. ¹⁵ And ^bafter the reading of the Law and the Prophets, the rulers of the synagogue sent unto them, saying, "Ye men and brethren! if ye have 'any word of exhortation for the people, say on!"

¹⁶ Then^f Paul stood up, and ^dbeckoning with his hand said, "Men of Israel, and 'ye that fear God, give audience! ¹⁷ The God of this people of Israel ^jchose our fathers, and exalted the people ^ewhen they dwelt as strangers in the land of Egypt, ^hand with a high arm brought He them out of it; ¹⁸ and ⁱabout the time of forty years ^{*}suffered He their manners in the ^gwilderness; ¹⁹ and when ^jHe had destroyed seven nations in the land of Chanaan, ^kHe divided their land to them by lot. ²⁰ And after that ^lHe gave unto them judges about the space of four hundred and fifty years, ^muntil Samuel the^h prophet. ²¹ And ⁿafterward they desired a king: and God gave unto them Saul the son of Cis, a man of the tribe of Benjamin, by the space of forty years. ²² And ^owhen He had removed him, ^pHe raised up unto them David to be their king; to whom also He gave testimony, and said, 'I ^qhave found David the son of Jesse, ^ra man after mine own heart, which shall fulfill all my will.' ²³ Of ^sthis man's seed hath God according 'to his promise raised unto Israel ^ta Saviour, Jesus: ²⁴ when ^vJohn had first preached before his coming the baptism of repentance to all the people of Israel. ²⁵ And as John fulfilled his course, he said, 'Whom ^wthink ye that I am? I am not he; but, behold! there cometh One after me, whose shoes of his feet I am not worthy to loose.' ²⁶ Men and brethren, children of the stock of Abraham, and whosoever among you feareth God, ^xto you is the word of this salvation sent. ²⁷ For they that dwell at Jerusalem, and their rulers, ^ybecause they knew him not, nor yet the voices of the Prophets ^zwhich are read every Sabbath day, "they have fulfilled them in condemningⁱ him; ²⁸ and ^bthough they found no cause of death in him, ^cyet desired they Pilate that he should be slain. ²⁹ And ^dwhen they had fulfilled all that was written of him, 'they took him down from the tree, and laid him in a sepulchre; ³⁰ but ^eGod raised him from the dead, ³¹ and ^fhe was seen many days of them which came up with him ^gfrom Galilee to Jerusalem, ⁱwho are his witnesses unto the people. ³² And we declare unto you glad tidings, how that ^jthe promise which was made unto the fathers, ³³ God hath fulfilled the same unto us their children, in that he hath raised up Jesus again; as it is also written in the ^ksecond Psalm,—

'Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee.'

³⁴ And as concerning that He raised him up from the dead, now no more to return to corruption, He said on this wise,—

'I 'will give you the sure ^lmercies of David.'^k

³⁵ Wherefore he saith also in another ^m*Psalms*,—

'Thou shalt not suffer thine Holy One to see corruption.'

⁴² And when the Jews were gone out of the synagogue, the Gentiles besought that these words might be preached to them ^{*}the next Sabbath.¹ ⁴³ Now when the congregation was broken up, many of the Jews and religious proselytes followed Paul and Barnabas: who, speaking [to them], ^rpersuaded them to continue in ^sthe grace of God.

⁴⁴ And the next Sabbath day came almost the whole city together to hear the word of God. ⁴⁵ But when the Jews saw the multitudes, they were filled with envy, and ^sspake against those things which were spoken by Paul, contradicting and blaspheming. ⁴⁶ Then Paul and Barnabas waxed bold, and said, “It ^uwas necessary that the word of God should first have been spoken to you; but ^vseeing ye put it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, lo! ^wwe turn to the Gentiles. ⁴⁷ For so hath the Lord commanded us, saying,—

‘I ^xhave set thee to be a Light of the Gentiles,

That thou shouldest be for salvation unto the ends of the earth.’ ”

⁴⁸ And when the Gentiles heard this, they were glad, and glorified the word of the Lord; ^yand as many as were ordained to ^meternal life believed. ⁴⁹ And the word of the Lord was published throughout all the region. ⁵⁰ But the Jews stirred up the devout and honorable women, and the chief men of the city, and ^zraised persecution against Paul and Barnabas, and expelled them out of their coasts.

ing that he had faith to be healed, ¹⁰ said with a loud voice, “ Stand ‘upright on thy feet !” And he leaped and walked.

¹⁹ And ^othere came thither certain Jews from Antioch and Iconium, who persuaded the^p people, ^qand, having stoned Paul, drew him out of the city, supposing he had been dead. ²⁰ Howbeit, as the disciples stood round about him, he rose up, and came into the city.

SECTION XIII.—St. Paul and Barnabas go up to Jerusalem to consult the Apostles and Elders on the Dispute concerning Circumcision—Decree of James and of the Church therein.

ACTS xv. 3–29.

³ AND ^abeing brought on their way by the Church, they passed through Phenice and Samaria, ^bdeclaring the conversion of the Gentiles; and they caused great joy unto all the brethren. ⁴ And when they were come to Jerusalem, they were received of the Church, and of the apostles and elders; and ^cthey declared all things that God had done with them. ⁵ But^r there ^{*}rose up certain of the sect of the Pharisees which believed, saying, “That ^dit was needful to circumcise them, and to command them to keep the Law of Moses.”

⁶ And the apostles and elders came together for to consider of this matter. ⁷ And when there had been much disputing, Peter rose up, and said unto them, “Men ^eand brethren, ye know how that a good while ago God made choice among us, that the Gentiles by my mouth should hear the word of the Gospel, and believe. ⁸ And God, ^fwhich knoweth the hearts, bare them witness, ^ggiving them the Holy Ghost, even as he did unto us; ⁹ and ^hput no difference between us and them, ⁱpurifying their hearts by faith. ¹⁰ Now therefore why tempt ye God, ^jto put a yoke upon the neck of the disciples, which neither our fathers nor we were able to^s bear? ¹¹ But ^kwe believe that through the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ we shall be saved, even as they.”

¹³ And after they had held their peace, ^mJames answered, saying, “Men ⁿand brethren, hearken unto me! ¹⁴ Simeon ⁿhath declared how God at the first did visit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people [for] his name. ¹⁵ And to this agree the words of the Prophets; as it is written,— o Amos 9. 11, 12.

And will build again the Tabernacle of David, which is fallen down;
And I will build again the ruins thereof, them, that they abstain ^rfrom pollutions of idols, and ^efrom fornication, and from things strangled, 'and fromⁿ blood. ²¹ For Moses of old time hath in every city them that preach Him, "being read in the synagogues every Sabbath day."

ACTS xvi. 12, to the end.

¹² AND from thence to ^aPhilippi, which is ^{*}the chief city of that part of Macedonia, and a colony. And we were in that city abiding certain days. ¹³ And on the [†]Sabbath we went out of the city by a river side, where prayer was wont to be made, and we sat down, and spake unto the women which resorted thither.

¹⁵ And when she was baptized, and her household, she besought us, saying, “If ye have judged me to be faithful to the Lord, come into my house, and abide there.” And ^cshe constrained us.

¹⁶ And it came to pass, as we went to prayer, a certain damsel ^dpossessed with a spirit [†]of divination met us, which brought her masters ^emuch gain by ^hsoothsaying. ¹⁷ The same followed Paul and us, and cried, saying, “These men are the servants of the Most High God, which show unto us the way of salvation!” ¹⁸ And this did she many days. But Paul, ^fbeing grieved, turned and said to the spirit, “I command thee in the name of Jesus Christ to come out of her.”

¹⁹ And he came out the same hour.

¹⁹ And ^hwhen her masters saw that the hope of their gains was gone, ⁱthey caught Paul and Silas, and ^jdrew them into the ^{*}market-place, unto the rulers; ²⁰ and brought them to the magistrates, saying, “These men, being Jews, ^kdo exceedingly trouble our city, ²¹ and teach customs, which are not lawful for us to receive, neither to observe, being Romans.” ²² And the multitude rose up together against them; and the magistrates rent off their clothes, ^land commanded to beat them; ²³ and when they had laid many stripes upon them, they cast them into prison, charging the jailor to keep them safely: ²⁴ who, having received such a charge, thrust them into the inner prison, and made their feet fast in the stocks.

²⁵ And at midnight Paul and Silas prayed, and sang praises unto God: and the prisoners heard them. ²⁶ And ^msuddenly there was a great earthquake, so that the foundations of the prison were shaken: and immediately ⁿall the doors were opened, and every one’s bands were loosed. ²⁷ And the keeper of the prison awaking out of his sleep, and seeing the prison doors open, he drew out his sword, and would have killed himself, supposing that the prisoners had been fled. ²⁸ But Paul cried with a loud voice, saying, “Do thyself no harm: for we are all here!” ²⁹ Then he called for a light, and sprang in, and came trembling, and fell down before Paul and Silas. ³⁰ And brought them out, and said, “Sirs! ^owhat must I do to be saved?” ³¹ And they said, “Believe ^pon the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house.” ³² And they spake unto him the word of the Lord, and to all that were in his house. ³³ And he took them the same hour of the night, and washed their stripes; and was baptized, he and all his, straightway. ³⁴ And when he had brought them into his house, ^qhe set meat before them, and rejoiced, believing in God with all his house.

³⁵ And when it was day, the magistrates sent the serjeants, saying, “Let those men go.” ³⁶ And the keeper of the prison told this saying to Paul, “The magistrates have sent to let you go: now therefore depart, and go in peace.” ³⁷ But Paul said unto them, “They have beaten us openly uncondemned, ^rbeing Romans, and have cast us into prison; and now do they thrust us out privily? nay verily; but let them

St. Paul reproves Peter for Judaizing—He maintains the Doctrine of Justification by Faith, and argues, that if those Jews who had embraced Christianity were convinced of the insufficiency of the Ceremonial Law, as the means of Salvation, it was impossible that the Gentiles should be expected to conform to it, or that it should be obligatory on them.

face, because he was to be blamed. ¹² For before that certain came from James, ^bhe did eat with the Gentiles; but when they were come, he withdrew and separated himself, fearing them which were of the Circumcision. ¹³ And the other Jews dissembled likewise with him; insomuch that Barnabas also was carried away with their dissimulation. ¹⁴ But when I saw that they walked not uprightly according to 'the truth of the Gospel, I said unto Peter ^dbefore them all, "If 'thou, being a Jew, livest after the manner of Gentiles, and not as do the Jews, why compellest thou the Gentiles to live as do the Jews?"

¹⁵ We ^f*who are* Jews by nature, and not ^esinners of the Gentiles, ¹⁶ (knowing ^hthat a man is not justified by the works of the Law, but ⁱby the faith of Jesus Christ,) even we have believed in Jesus Christ, that we might be justified by the faith of Christ, and not by the works of the Law: for ^jby the works of the Law shall no flesh be justified. ¹⁷ But if, while we seek to be justified by Christ, we ourselves also are found ^ksinners, is therefore Christ the minister of sin? God forbid!

¹⁸ For if I build again the things which I destroyed, I make myself a transgressor.¹ ¹⁹ For I ^lthrough the Law ^mam dead to the Law, that I might ⁿlive unto God. ²⁰ I am ^ocrucified with Christ; nevertheless I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me; and the life which I now live in the flesh ^pI live by the faith of ^qthe Son of God, ^rwho loved me, and gave himself for me. ²¹ I do not frustrate the grace of God; for ^sif righteousness come by the Law, then Christ is dead in vain.

St. Paul reproves the Galatians for deserting their first Principles of Faith, in supposing that the New Dispensation was not sufficient for Salvation; although it had been confirmed to them by those spiritual Blessings and Gifts which were unknown to the Mosaic Law.

¹ O FOOLISH Galatians! ^awho hath bewitched you, [that ye should not obey ^bthe truth?] before whose eyes Jesus Christ hath been evidently set forth, crucified among you. ² This only would I learn of you, Received ye ^cthe Spirit by the works of the Law, ^dor by the hearing of faith? ³ Are ye so foolish? ^ehaving begun in the Spirit, are ye now made perfect by ^fthe flesh? ⁴ Have ^gye suffered ^hso many things in vain? if it be yet in vain! ⁵ He therefore ⁱthat ministereth to you the Spirit, and worketh miracles among you, doeth he it by the works of the Law, or by the hearing of faith?

§ 6.—chap. iii. 6–18.

St. Paul proves the Truth of his Doctrine by the example of Abraham, who was justified by his Faith in the Promises of God.

⁶ EVEN as ^aAbraham believed God, and it was ^{*}accounted to him for righteousness. ⁷ Know ye therefore ^bthat they which are of faith, the same are the children of Abraham. ⁸ And ^cthe Scripture, foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the Gospel unto Abraham, saying, "In ^dthee shall all nations be blessed." ⁹ So then they which be of faith are blessed with faithful Abraham. ¹⁰ For as many as are of the works of the Law are under the curse. For it is written, "Cursed ^eis every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the Book of the Law to do them!" ¹¹ But ^fthat no man is justified by the Law in the sight of God, it is evident; for, "The ^gjust shall live by ^mfaith:" ¹² and ^hthe Law is not of faith; but "The ⁱman that doeth them shall live in them." ¹³ Christ ^jhath redeemed us from the curse of the Law, being made a curse for us; (for it is written, "Cursed ^kis every one that hangeth on a tree";)

¹⁵ Brethren, I speak after the manner of men; ⁿthough it be but a man's ^tcovenant, yet if it be confirmed, no man disannulleth, or addeth thereto: ¹⁶ now ^oto Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, "And to seeds," as of many; but as of one, "And to thy seed," which is ^pChrist.ⁿ ¹⁷ And this I say, That the covenant, that was confirmed before of God in Christ, the Law, ^qwhich was four hundred and thirty years after, cannot disannul, ^rthat it should make the promise of none effect. ¹⁸ For if ^sthe inheritance be of the Law, it is no more of promise; but God gave it to Abraham by promise.

§ 7.—chap. iii. 19, to the end.

St. Paul declares the object of the Mosaic Law was to preserve the Jews, from whom Christ was to be born, from the idolatrous Practices and Rites of the Heathens, and to educate them in the Hope and Expectation of the promised Messiah.

¹⁹ WHEREFORE then serveth the Law? ^aIt was added because of transgressions, (till ^bthe Seed should come to whom the promise was made;) and it was ^cordained by angels in the hand ^dof a mediator. ²⁰ Now a mediator is not a mediator of one, ^ebut God is one. ²¹ Is the Law then against the promises of God? God forbid! ^fFor if there had been a law given which could have given life, verily righteousness should have been by the Law; ²² but ^gthe Scripture hath concluded ^hall under sin, ⁱthat the promise by faith of Jesus Christ might be given to them that believe. ²³ But before Faith came, we were kept under the Law, shut up unto the Faith which should afterwards be revealed. ²⁴ Wherefore ^jthe Law was our schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ, ^kthat we might be justified by faith; ²⁵ but after that Faith is come, we are no longer under a schoolmaster. ²⁶ For ye ^lare all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. ²⁷ For ^mas many of you as have been baptized into Christ ⁿhave put on Christ.^o ²⁸ There ^pis neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female; for ye are all ^qone in Christ Jesus. ²⁹ And ^rif ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and ^sheirs according to the promise.

§ 8.—chap. iv. 1-11.

St. Paul adds another Illustration, showing the Purport of the Law, and reproving the Jewish and Gentile Converts for their desire again to place themselves in Bondage—His Fear on that account.

¹ Now I say, That the heir, as long as he is a child, differeth nothing from a servant, though he be lord of all; ² but is under tutors and governors until the time appointed of the father. ³ Even so we, when we were children, ^awere in bondage under the ^belements of the world; ⁴ but ^cwhen the fulness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son, ^dmade ^eof a woman, ^fmade under the Law, ⁵ to ^gredeem them that were under the Law, ^hthat we might receive the adoption of sons. ⁶ And because ye are sons, God hath sent forth ⁱthe Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father! ⁷ Wherefore thou art no more a servant, but a son; ^jand if a son, then a heir of God through Christ. ⁸ Howbeit then, ^kwhen ye knew not God, ^lye did service unto them which by nature are no gods; ⁹ but now, ^mafter that ye have known God, or rather are known of God, ⁿhow turn ye ^oagain to ^pthe weak and beggarly ^qelements, whereunto ye desire again to be in bondage? ¹⁰ Observe ^rye days, and months, and times, and ^syears?^p ¹¹ I am afraid of you, ^tlest I have bestowed upon you labor in vain.

St. Paul asserts that all those who depend upon the Jewish Law for Salvation, deprive themselves of the Blessing of the Christian Dispensation, and become Debtors to the whole Law—He exhorts them to practise the graces and virtues required by the Spiritual Religion of the Gospel, taking care to avoid those Moral Offences which the Law of Moses condemned, and suppressing that spirit of vainglory and desire of Distinction, which is the cause of so much Provocation and Envy among Christians.

¹STAND fast therefore in ^athe liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and be not entangled again ^bwith the yoke of bondage. ²Behold! hope of righteousness by faith. ⁶ For ^hin Jesus Christ neither circumcision availeth any thing, nor uncircumcision; but ⁱfaith which worketh by love. ⁷ Ye ^jdid run well; ^{*}who ^kdid hinder you that ye should not obey the truth? ⁸ This persuasion cometh not of him ^lthat calleth you. ⁹ A ^mlittle leaven leaveneth the whole lump. ¹⁰ I ⁿhave confidence in you through the Lord, that ye will be none otherwise minded; but ^ohe that troubleth you ^pshall bear his judgment, whosoever he be. ¹¹ And ^qI, brethren, if I yet preach circumcision, ^rwhy do I yet suffer persecution? is ^sthen the offence of the cross ceased? ¹² I ^twould! —They were even cut off ^uwhich trouble you.

¹⁶ This I say then, ^zWalk in the Spirit, and ^{aa}ye shall not fulfil the lust of the Flesh. ¹⁷ For ^{ab}the Flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the Flesh; and these are contrary the one to the other; ^{ac}so that ye cannot do the things that ye would. ¹⁸ But ^{ad}if ye be led of the Spirit, ye are not under the Law. ¹⁹ Now ^{ae}the works of the Flesh are manifest, which are these;—[adultery,] fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, ^{af}idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, ^{ag}envyings, murders, drunkenness, revellings, and such like; of the which I tell you before, as I have also told you in time past, ^{ah}that they which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God. ²² But ^{ai}the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, ^{aj}gentleness, ^{ak}goodness, ^{al}faith, ²³ meekness, temperance: ^{am}against such there is no law. ²⁴ And they that are Christ's ^{an}have crucified the Flesh with the ^{ao}affections and lusts. ²⁵ If ^{ap}we live in the Spirit, let us also walk in the Spirit. ²⁶ Let ^{aq}us not be desirous of vainglory, provoking one another, envying one another.

St. Paul exhorts them to Christian Charity, from a consideration of their own Weaknesses, from the Necessity of examining their Actions, for which all shall be accountable, and from the Duty of contributing to the Support of the Ministry, and to the Necessities of all mankind, particularly to our fellow-Christians.

St. Paul concludes, by reminding the Galatians, that the Zealots for Judaism did not keep the Law, and desired only to have their proselytes circumcised, that they themselves might escape Persecution; but St. Paul, on the contrary, declares, that he cannot be actuated by such selfish motives, for he bears in his body the marks of his sufferings for the Lord Jesus; and testifies, that Holiness alone availeth with God. He prays for a blessing on the Church.

¹¹ YE see how large a letter I have written unto you with mine own hand. ¹² As many as desire to make a fair show in the flesh, ^athey constrain you to be circumcised; ^bonly lest they should ^csuffer persecution for the cross of Christ. ¹³ For neither they themselves who are circumcised keep the Law; but desire to have you circumcised, that they may glory in your flesh. ¹⁴ But ^dGod forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, ^eby whom the world is ^fcrucified unto me, and I unto the world. ¹⁵ For in ^gChrist Jesus neither circumcision availeth any thing, nor uncircumcision, but ^ha new creature. ¹⁶ And ⁱas many as walk ^jaccording to this rule, peace be on them, and mercy, and upon ^kthe Israel of God!

ACTS xvii. 10–14.

¹⁰ AND ^athe brethren immediately sent away Paul and Silas by night unto Berea. Who coming thither went into the synagogue of the Jews. ¹¹ These were more noble than those in Thessalonica, in that they received the word with all readiness of mind, and ^bsearched the Scriptures daily, whether those things were so. ¹² Therefore many of them believed; also of honorable women which were Greeks, and of men, not a few; ¹³ but when the Jews of Thessalonica had knowledge that the word of God was preached of Paul at Berea, they came thither also, and stirred up the people. ¹⁴ And ^cthen immediately the brethren sent away Paul, to go as it were to the sea; but Silas and Timotheus abode there still.

SECTION XII.—From Berea, having left there Silas and Timothy, St. Paul proceeds to Athens, where he preaches to the Philosophers and Students.

ACTS xvii. 15, to the end.

¹⁶ Now while Paul waited for them at Athens, ^bhis spirit was stirred in him, when he saw the city ^cwholly given to idolatry. ¹⁷ Therefore disputed he in the synagogue with the Jews, and with the devout persons, and in the market daily with them that met with him. ^s ¹⁸ Then certain philosophers of the Epicureans, and of the Stoics, encountered him; and some said, "What will this [†]babblor say?" other some, "He seemeth to be a setter forth of strange gods;" because he preached unto them Jesus, and the Resurrection. ¹⁹ And they took him, and brought him unto [‡]Areopagus, saying, "May we know what this new doctrine, whereof thou speakest, is?" ²⁰ For thou bringest certain strange things to our ears. We would know therefore what these things mean.” ²¹ (For all the Athenians and strangers which were there spent their time in nothing else, but either to tell, or to hear some new thing.)

²² Then Paul stood in the midst of *Mars’ Hill, and said, “Ye men of Athens! I perceive that in all things ye are too superstitious. ²³ For as I passed by, and beheld your †devotions, I found an altar with this inscription, To the UNKNOWN GOD! † Whom therefore ye ignorantly worship, Him declare I unto you. ²⁴ God †that made the world and all things therein, seeing that he is †Lord of heaven and earth, †dwelleth not in temples made with hands; ²⁵ neither is worshipped with men’s hands, †as though he needed any thing, seeing †he giveth to all life, and breath, and all things; ²⁶ and hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and †the bounds of their habitation; ²⁷ that †they should seek the Lord, if haply they might feel after Him, and find Him, †though He be not far from every one of us. ²⁸ For †in Him we live, and move, and have our being; †as certain also of your own poets have said, “For we are also his †offspring.” ²⁹ Forasmuch then, as we are the offspring of God, †we ought not to think that the Godhead is like unto gold, or silver, or stone, graven by art and man’s device. ³⁰ And †the times of this ignorance God winked at; but †now commandeth all men every where to repent; ³¹ because he hath appointed a day, in the which †he will judge the world in righteousness by †that Man whom he hath ordained; †whereof he hath †given assurance unto all men, in that †he hath raised Him from the dead.”

³² And when they heard of the resurrection of the dead, some mocked; and others said, “We will hear thee again of this matter.” ³³ So Paul departed from among them. ³⁴ Howbeit certain men clave unto him, and believed: among the which was Dionysius the Areopagite, and a woman named Damaris, and others with them.

SECTION XIII.—From Athens St. Paul proceeds to Corinth, where he is reduced to labor for his support—Silas and Timothy join him there.

ACTS xviii. 1-5.

mention of you in our prayers ; ³ remembering ^d without ceasing ^e your work of faith, ^f and labor of love, and patience of hope in our Lord Jesus Christ, in the sight of God and our Father ; ⁴ knowing, brethren ^g beloved, ^h your election of God.

§ 2.—chap. i. 5, to the end.

St. Paul derives his first Argument for the Truth of Christianity, from the miraculous Gifts of the Holy Spirit—He rejoices in, and commends, their steady Adherence to the Christian Faith.

⁵ For ^a our Gospel came not unto you in word only, but also in power, and ^b in the Holy Ghost, ^c and in much assurance ; as ^d ye know what manner of men we were among you for your sake. ⁶ And ^e ye became followers of us, and of the Lord, having received the word in much affliction, ^f with joy of the Holy Ghost ; ⁷ so that ye were ensamples to all that believe in Macedonia and Achaia. ⁸ For from you ^g sounded out the word of the Lord not only in Macedonia and Achaia, but also ^h in every place your faith to God-ward is spread abroad ; so that we need not to speak any thing. ⁹ For they themselves show of us ⁱ what manner of entering in we had unto you, ^j and how ye turned to God from idols to serve the living and true God ; ¹⁰ and ^k to wait for his Son ^l from heaven, ^m whom he raised from the dead, even Jesus, which delivered us ⁿ from the wrath to come.

From the Character, Conduct, and Sufferings of the Preachers of the Gospel, St. Paul demonstrates its Truth—and thanks God that the Thessalonians had received it, not as a system of Philosophy, but as the Word of God—which was shown by its Influence on their Conduct.

¹ For ^a yourselves, brethren, know our entrance in unto you, that it was not in vain : ² but even after that we had suffered before, and were shamefully entreated, as ye know, at ^b Philippi, ^c we were bold in our God ^d to speak unto you the Gospel of God ^e with much contention. ³ For ^f our exhortation was not of deceit, nor of uncleanness, nor in guile ; ⁴ but as ^g we were allowed of God ^h to be put in trust with the Gospel, even so we speak ; ⁱ not as pleasing men, but God, ^j which trieth our hearts. ⁵ For ^k neither at any time used we flattering words, as ye know, nor a cloak of covetousness ; (God ^l is witness !) ⁶ nor ^m of men sought we glory, neither of you, nor yet of others, when ⁿ we might have ^o been ^a burdensome, ^p as the apostles of Christ ; ⁷ but ^q we were gentle among you. Even as a nurse cherisheth her children, ⁸ so being affectionately desirous of you, we were willing ^r to have imparted unto you, not the Gospel of God only, but also ^s our own souls, because ye were dear unto us. ⁹ For ye remember, brethren, our labor and travail : for ^t laboring night and day, ^u because we would not be chargeable unto any of you, we preached unto you the Gospel of God. ¹⁰ Ye ^v are witnesses, and God also, ^w how holily and justly and unblameably we behaved ourselves among you that believe ; ¹¹ as ye know how we exhorted and comforted and charged every one of you, as a father doth his children, ¹² that ^x ye would walk worthy of God, ^y who hath called you unto his kingdom and glory. ¹³ For this cause also thank we God ^z without ceasing, because, when ye received the word of God which ye heard of us, ye received it ^a not as the word of men, but, as it is in truth, the word of God, which effectually worketh also in you that believe.

§ 4.—chap. ii. 14, to the end.

St. Paul shows the persecuting spirit of the Jews, by which the Power of the Gospel, and the Faith of Converts is tried—their Repugnance to the Gospel being preached to the Gentiles—their Iniquity and Destruction—He declares his love for the brethren, and his desire to see them, which has only been prevented by the influence of Satan over the hearts of his opponents.

¹⁴ For ye, brethren, became followers ^aof the Churches of God which in Judæa are in Christ Jesus: for ^bye also have suffered like things of your own countrymen, ^ceven as they have of the Jews; ¹⁵ who ^dboth killed the Lord Jesus, and ^etheir own prophets, and have ^{*}persecuted us; and they please not God, ^fand are contrary to all men; ¹⁶ forbidding ^gus to speak to the Gentiles that they might be saved, ^hto fill up their sins alway: ⁱfor the wrath is come upon them to the uttermost.

¹⁷ But we, brethren, being taken from you for a short time ^jin presence, not in heart, endeavoured the more abundantly ^kto see your face with great desire. ¹⁸ Wherefore we would have come unto you; even I Paul, once and again; but ^lSatan hindered us. ¹⁹ For ^mwhat is our hope, or joy, or ⁿcrown of rejoicing? Are not even ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus [Christ], ^oat his coming? ²⁰ For ye are our glory and joy.

§ 5.—chap. iii. 1–5.

St. Paul declares his Anxiety for the Thessalonians, and reminds them that he had sent Timotheus to confirm their faith, and comfort them in those various afflictions to which all Christians, as they had been before warned, were exposed.

St. Paul declares himself to be comforted by Timothy's account of them—He desires another opportunity of seeing them again—and prays for their perseverance in holiness till the coming of Christ.

⁶ BUT ^anow when Timotheus came from you unto us, and brought us good tidings of your faith and charity, and that ye have good remembrance of us always, desiring greatly to see us, ^bas we also to see you; ⁷ therefore, brethren, ^cwe were comforted over you in all our affliction and distress by your faith: ⁸ for now we live, if ye ^dstand fast in the Lord. ⁹ For ^ewhat thanks can we render to God again for you, for all the joy wherewith we joy for your sakes before our God? ¹⁰ night ^fand day ^gpraying exceedingly ^hthat we might see your face, ⁱand might perfect that which is lacking in your faith. ¹¹ Now God himself and our Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ, ^{*}direct ^jour way unto you; ¹² and the Lord ^kmake you to increase and abound in love ^lone toward another, and toward all men, even as we do toward you: ¹³ to the end he may ^mstablish your hearts unblameable in holiness before God, even our Father, at the coming of our Lord Jesus [Christ] ⁿwith all his saints.

St. Paul shows the Gentile Converts the necessity of holiness and purity, and warns them against those vices to which they had been before addicted, and which were still practised by the Heathens—He exhorts them to brotherly love, and industry in their callings.

¹ FURTHERMORE then we ^{*}beseech you, brethren, and texhort you by the Lord Jesus, ^athat as ye have received of us ^bhow ye ought to walk and to please God, so ye would abound more and more; ² for ye know what commandments we gave you by the Lord Jesus. ³ For this is ^a the will of God even ^e your sanctification; ^f that ye should abstain from fornication; ⁴ that ^g every one of you should know how to possess his vessel in sanctification and honor; ⁵ not ^h in the lust of concupiscence, ⁱ even as the Gentiles ^j which know not God; ⁶ that ^k no man go beyond and ^l defraud his brother ^m in any matter, because that the Lord ⁿ is the avenger of all such, as we also have forewarned you and testified. ⁷ For God hath not called us unto uncleanness, ^o but unto holiness. ⁸ He ^p therefore that ^q despiseth, despiseth not man, but God, ^r who hath also given unto us his Holy Spirit.

⁹ But as touching brotherly love ^s ye need not that I write unto you: for ^t ye yourselves are taught of God ^u to love one another: ¹⁰ and ^v indeed ye do it toward all the brethren which are in all Macedonia. But we beseech you, brethren, ^w that ye increase more and more; ¹¹ and that ye study to be quiet, and ^x to do your own business, and ^y to work with your [own] hands, as we commanded you; ¹² that ^z ye may walk honestly toward them that are without, and that ye may have lack ^{aa} of nothing.

¹³ BUT I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, ^a even as others ^b which have no hope. ¹⁴ For ^c if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so ^d them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. ¹⁵ For this we say unto you ^e by the word of the Lord, that, ^f we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord, shall not prevent them which are asleep. ¹⁶ For ^g the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the Archangel, and with ^h the trump of God; ⁱ and the dead in Christ shall rise first: ¹⁷ then ^j we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them ^k in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air: and so ^l shall we ever be with the Lord. ¹⁸ Wherefore ^m comfort ⁿ one another with these words.

St. Paul shows the Necessity of Holiness from the sudden and terrible appearance of Christ, and the inevitable Destruction of the Wicked, and of those who are not prepared for the day of his coming—Those who continue firm in the faith and practice of the Gospel are comforted with the assurance that this day will be a day of salvation to them through Jesus Christ.

vation: ⁹ for ^mGod hath not appointed us to wrath, "but to obtain salvation by our Lord Jesus Christ, ¹⁰ who ^odied for us; that, whether we wake or sleep, we should live together with him. ¹¹ Wherefore ^{*}comfort yourselves together, and edify one another, even as also ye do.

St. Paul admonishes them to have a due regard for their spiritual instructors, gives various other impressive Exhortations—and concludes with prayers and salutations.

¹² AND we beseech you, brethren, ^ato know them which labor among you, and are over you in the Lord, and admonish you; ¹³ and to esteem them very highly in love for their work's sake. ^bAnd be at peace among yourselves. ¹⁴ Now we ^{*}exhort you, brethren, ^cwarn them that are [†]unruly, ^dcomfort the feeble-minded, ^esupport the weak, ^fbe patient toward all men. ¹⁵ See ^gthat none render evil for evil unto any man; but ever ^hfollow that which is good, both among yourselves, and to all men. ¹⁶ Rejoice ⁱevermore; ¹⁷ pray ^jwithout ceasing: ¹⁸ in ^kevery thing give thanks. For this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you. ¹⁹ Quench ^lnot the Spirit: ²⁰ despise ^mnot prophecysings. ²¹ Prove ⁿall things; ^ohold fast that which is good; ²² abstain ^pfrom all appearance of evil. ²³ And ^qthe very God of peace ^rsanctify you wholly; and I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body ^sbe preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ! ²⁴ Faithful ^tis He that calleth you, who also will do it.

²⁵ Brethren, ^upray for us. ²⁶ Greet ^vall the brethren with a holy kiss. ²⁷ I [†]charge you by the Lord, that ^wthis Epistle be read unto all ^xthe holy brethren. ²⁸ The ^ygrace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you! [Amen.]

SECTION XV.—St. Paul, being rejected by the Jews, continues at Corinth, preaching to the Gentiles.

Acts xviii. 6-11.

⁷ And he departed thence, and entered into a certain man's house, named Justus, ^fone that worshipped God, whose house joined hard to the synagogue. ⁸ And ^gCrispus, the chief ruler of the synagogue, believed on the Lord, with all his house; and many of the Corinthians hearing believed, and were baptized. ⁹ Then ^hspake the Lord to Paul in the night by a vision, "Be not afraid, but speak, and hold not thy peace; ¹⁰ for ⁱI am with thee, and no man shall set on thee to hurt thee; for I have much people in this city." ¹¹ And he ^{*}continued there a year and six months, teaching the word of God among them.

SECTION XVI.—St. Paul writes his Second Epistle to the Thessalonians, in order to refute an error which they had fallen into concerning the sudden coming of the Day of Judgment—He prophesies the rise, prosperity, and overthrow of a great Apostacy in the Christian Church.^b

Thessalonians ^bin God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ! ² Grace unto you, and peace, from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ.

§ 2.—chap. i. 3–5.

St. Paul rejoices at their Constancy under persecution; and assures them that their patient endurance is an evidence of a future judgment, when they will receive their reward.

³ WE ^aare bound to thank God always for you, brethren, as it is meet, because that your faith groweth exceedingly, and the charity of every one of you all toward each other aboundeth; ⁴so ^bthat we ourselves glory in you in the Churches of God ^cfor your patience and faith ^din all your persecutions and tribulations that ye ^eendure: ⁵which ^fis ^aa manifest token of the righteous judgment of God, that ye may be counted worthy of the kingdom of God, ^gfor which ye also suffer.

§ 3.—chap. i. 6, to the end.

St. Paul predicts the Coming of Christ to judgment, and the everlasting Destruction of all those who have rejected his Gospel.

¹¹ Wherefore also we pray always for you, that our God ^kwould ^lcount you worthy of this calling, and fulfil all the good pleasure of his goodness, and ^mthe work of faith with power: ¹²that ⁿthe name of our Lord Jesus [Christ] may be glorified in you, and ye in him, according to the grace of our God and the Lord Jesus Christ.

The Apostle here begins to rectify their error, with regard to the speedy coming of Christ to judgment—He warns them against any pretended revelations or spurious epistles, and calls to their memory what he had already told them, that a grand Apostacy must first take place: the character of which he fully describes.

¹ Now we beseech you, brethren, ^aby the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, ^band ^cby our gathering together unto him, ²that ^cye be not soon shaken in mind, or be troubled, (neither by spirit, nor by word, nor by letter as from us,) as that the day of Christ is at hand. ³ Let ^dno man deceive you by any means: for that day shall not come, ^eexcept there come a falling away first, and ^fthat Man of Sin be revealed, ^gthe Son of Perdition, ^hwho opposeth and ⁱexalteth himself ^jabove all that is called God, or that is worshipped, so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God. ⁵ Remember ye not, that, when I was yet with you, I told you these things? ⁶ And now ye know what ^kwithholdeth that he might be revealed in his time. ⁷ For ^lthe mystery of iniquity doth already work: only he who now letteth will let, until he be taken out of the way. ⁸ And then shall that Wicked be revealed (whom ^mthe Lord shall consume ⁿwith the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy ^mwith the brightness of his coming); ⁹even ^ohim, whose coming is ^pafter the working of Satan with all power and ^qsigns and lying wonders, ¹⁰and with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in ^rthem that perish; because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved. ¹¹ And ^sfor this cause God shall send them strong delusion, ^tthat they should believe a lie: ¹²that they all might be damned who believed not the truth, but ^uhad pleasure in unrighteousness."

§ 5.—chap. ii. 13, to the end.

He rejoices over the Thessalonians, and exhorts them to continue steadfast in the doctrines in which they had been instructed.

¹³ BUT ^awe are bound to give thanks alway to God for you, brethren beloved of the Lord, because God ^bhath ^cfrom the beginning chosen you to salvation ^dthrough sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth: ¹⁴whereunto he called you by our Gospel, to ^ethe obtaining of the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ. ¹⁵Therefore, brethren, ^fstand fast, and hold ^gthe traditions which ye have been taught, whether by word, or our epistle. ¹⁶Now ^hour Lord Jesus Christ himself, and God, even our Father, ⁱwhich hath loved us, and hath given ^jus everlasting consolation and ^kgood hope through grace, ¹⁷comfort your hearts, ^land stablish [you] in every good word and work!

St. Paul desires them to pray for him and his companions, that the Gospel of God may be glorified as much in other Gentile nations as with them; and that they may be delivered from their persecutors—He repeats his prayer for their faith and patience.

¹ FINALLY, brethren, ^apray for us, that the word of the Lord ^bmay have ^cfree course, and be glorified, even as ^dit is with you: ²and ^ethat we may be delivered from unreasonable and wicked men; ^ffor all ^gmen have not faith. ³But ^hthe Lord is faithful, who shall stablish you, and ⁱkeep you from evil. ⁴And ^jwe have confidence in the Lord touching you, that ye both do and will do the things which we command you. ⁵And ^kthe Lord direct your hearts into the love of God, and ^linto the patient waiting for Christ!

St. Paul here advises the Thessalonians how to act towards those who still continue to live a disorderly and idle life, contrary to the express commands they had received from him—His prayer and blessing.

⁶ NOW ^awe command you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, ^bthat ye withdraw yourselves ^cfrom every brother that walketh ^ddisorderly, and not after ^ethe tradition which he received of us. ⁷For yourselves knew ^fhow ye ought to follow us: for ^gwe behaved not ourselves disorderly among you, ⁸neither did we eat any man's bread for nought; but ^hwrought with labor and travail night and day, that we might not be chargeable to any of you; ⁹not ⁱbecause we have not power, but to make ^jourselves an ensample unto you to follow us. ¹⁰For even when we were with you, this we commanded you, ^kthat if any would not work, neither should he eat. ¹¹For we hear that there are some ^lwhich walk among you disorderly, ^mworking not at all, but are busybodies. ¹²Now ⁿthem that are such we command and exhort by our Lord Jesus Christ, ^othat with quietness they work, and eat their own bread. ¹³But ye, ^pbrethren, ^qbe not weary in well doing. ¹⁴And if any man obey not our word ^rby this Epistle, note that man, and ^shave no company with him, that he may be ashamed: ¹⁵yet ^tcount him not as an enemy, ^ubut admonish him as a brother. ¹⁶Now ^vthe Lord of peace himself give you peace always by all means: the Lord be with you all!

12 AND when Gallio was the deputy of Achaia, the Jews made insurrection with one accord against Paul, and brought him to the Judgment-seat, ¹³ saying, "This fellow persuadeth men to worship God contrary to the Law." ¹⁴ And when Paul was now about to open his mouth, Gallio said unto the Jews, "If "it were a matter of wrong or wicked lewdness, O ye Jews! reason would that I should bear with you: ¹⁵ but if it be a question of words and names, and of your Law, look ye to it; for I will be no judge of such matters." ¹⁶ And he drave them from the Judgment-seat. ¹⁷ Then all the Greeks took ^bSosthenes, the chief ruler of the synagogue, and beat him before the Judgment-seat; and Gallio cared for none of those things.^h

St. Paul's Salutation.

¹ PAUL, a servant of God, and an apostle of Jesus Christ, (according to the faith of God's elect, and "the acknowledging of the truth ^bwhich is after godliness; ² *in "hope of eternal life, which God, ^dthat cannot lie, promised "before the world began; ³ but "hath in due times manifested his word through preaching, ^ewhich is committed unto me ^haccording to the commandment of God our Saviour;) ⁴ to ⁱTitus, ^jmine own son after ^kthe common faith! ^lGrace, mercy, and peace, from God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ our Saviour!

§ 2.—chap. i. 5-9.

St. Paul enumerates the necessary qualifications required of those whom Titus was appointed to ordain—more especially as the teachers were called upon to oppose and confute the Judaizing Christians, who were endeavouring to influence the Gentile Converts.

⁵ For this cause left I thee in Crete, that thou shouldest "set in order the things that are *wanting, and ^bordain elders in every city, as I had appointed thee: ⁶ if "any be blameless, ^dthe husband of one wife, "having faithful children, not accused of riot, or unruly. ⁷ For a bishop must be blameless, as ^fthe steward of God; not self-willed, not soon angry, ^gnot given to wine, no striker, ^hnot given to filthy lucre; ⁸ but ⁱa lover of hospitality, a lover of [†]good men, sober, just, holy, temperate; ⁹ holding ^jfast ^kthe faithful word [†]as he hath been taught, that he may be able ^lby sound doctrine both to exhort and to convince the gainsayers.

§ 3.—chap. i. 10, to the end.

St. Paul draws the character of the Cretians, particularly the Judaizing teachers.

¹⁰ For "there are many unruly and vain talkers and ^bdeceivers, "specially they of the Circumcision, ¹¹ whose mouths must be stopped; ^dwho subvert whole houses, teaching things which they ought not, "for filthy lucre's sake. ¹² One ^fof themselves, even a prophet of their own, said, "The Cretians are always liars, evil beasts, slow-bellies." ¹³ This witness is true. ^gWherefore rebuke them sharply, that they may be ^hsound in the faith; ⁱnot ^jgiving heed to Jewish fables, and ^kcommandments of men, that turn from the truth. ^lUnto ^mthe pure all things are pure: but ⁿunto them that are defiled and unbelieving is nothing pure; but even their mind and conscience is defiled. ^oThey profess that they know God; but ^pin works they deny Him, being abominable, and disobedient, ^qand unto every good work ^rreprobate.

St. Paul directs Titus to enforce Christian virtues, in opposition to the vices of the Cretians, and the rites and ceremonies they wished to introduce—Titus is further commanded to illustrate the purity of his doctrine, by his own personal example.

Titus is directed to exhort servants to fidelity, on Christian principles—He is reminded that the Christian religion is equally binding upon all ranks and descriptions of people, holding forth the same hope, and requiring the same holiness from all.

⁹ EXHORT ^aservants to be obedient unto their own masters, and to please them well ^bin all things; not ^canswering again; ¹⁰ not purloining, but showing all good fidelity; ^dthat they may adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things. ¹¹ For ^ethe grace of God ^fthat bringeth salvation ^ghath appeared to all men, ¹² teaching us ^hthat, denying ungodliness ⁱand worldly lusts, we should live soberly righteously, and godly, in this present world; ¹³ looking ^jfor that blessed ^khope, and the glorious ^lappearing of the Great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ; ¹⁴ who ^mgave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, ⁿand purify unto himself ^oa peculiar people, ^pzealous of good works. ¹⁵ These things speak, and ^qexhort, and rebuke with all authority: ^rlet no man despise thee.^k

§ 6.—chap. iii. 1-8.

Titus is directed, in opposition to the Judaizing Christians, to impress upon the minds of his converts the duty of submission to their civil governors, of whatsoever nation or religion; and, from the consideration of the great love and mercy of Christ toward themselves, Titus is desired to inculcate the duty of brotherly love and kindness to all.

¹³ Then ^ccertain of the vagabond Jews, ^eexorcists, ^dtook upon them to call over them which had evil spirits the name of the Lord Jesus, saying, “We adjure you by Jesus whom Paul preacheth.” ¹⁴ And there were seven sons of one Sceva, a Jew, and chief of the priests, which did so. ¹⁵ And the evil spirit answered and said, “Jesus I know, and Paul I know; but who are ye?” ¹⁶ And the man in whom the evil spirit was leaped on them, and overcame them, and prevailed against them, so that they fled out of that house naked and wounded. ¹⁷ And this was known to all the Jews and Greeks also dwelling at Ephesus; and ^efear fell on them all, and the name of the Lord Jesus was magnified.

¹⁸ And many that believed came, and ^fconfessed, and showed their deeds. ¹⁹ Many of them also which used curious arts brought their books together, and burned them before all men; and they counted the price of them, and found it fifty thousand pieces of silver. ²⁰ So ^gmightily grew the word of God and prevailed!

SECTION VI.—St. Paul writes his First Epistle to the Corinthians, to assert his Apostolic Authority, to reprove the Irregularities and Disorders of the Church, and to answer the Questions of the Converts on various points of Doctrine and Discipline.^f

St. Paul's Introduction, in which he asserts his Apostleship, and the unity of those who believe in Christ Jesus.

¹ PAUL ^a(called to be an apostle of Jesus Christ ^bthrough the will of God), and ^cSosthenes our brother, ² unto the Church of God which is at Corinth, ^dto them that ^eare sanctified in Christ Jesus, ^fcalled to be saints, with all that in every place ^gcall upon the name of Jesus Christ ^hour Lord, ⁱboth theirs and ours! ³ Grace ^jbe unto you, and peace, from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ!

§ 2.—chap. i. 4-9.

St. Paul rejoices at their conversion, and at the spiritual gifts which they had received in testimony of the truth of Christ.

⁴ I ^aTHANK my God always on your behalf, for the grace of God which is given you by Jesus Christ: ⁵ (that in every thing ye are enriched by him, ^bin all utterance, and in all knowledge; ⁶ even as ^cthe testimony of Christ was confirmed in you; ⁷ so that ye come behind in no gift; ^dwaiting for the ^ecoming of our Lord Jesus Christ :) ⁸ who ^fshall also confirm you unto the end, ^gthat ye may be blameless in the day of our Lord Jesus Christ. ⁹ God ^his faithful by whom ye were called unto the ⁱfellowship of his Son Jesus Christ our Lord.

St. Paul exhorts them to unity in the name of Jesus Christ, in whom was no division, in opposition to those Leaders under whose names they had enlisted themselves.

¹⁰ Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, ^athat ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no ^bdivisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment. ¹¹ For it hath been declared unto me of you, my brethren, by them which are of the house of Chloe, that there are contentions among you. ¹² Now this I say, ^bthat every one of you saith, I am of Paul; and I of ^cApollos; and I of ^dCephas; and I of Christ.

¹³ Is ^eChrist divided? was Paul crucified for you? or were ye baptized in the name of Paul? ¹⁴ I thank God that I baptized none of you, but ^fCrispus and ^gGaius; ¹⁵ lest any should say that I had baptized in mine own name. ¹⁶ And I baptized also the household of ^hStephanas; besides, I know not whether I baptized any other.

St. Paul asserts that he was sent to preach the Gospel not with learned and skilful eloquence, lest the power of God should be overlooked—He declares that the truths of the Gospel are not to be discovered by human wisdom or acquirements—And although the preaching of the Cross seems foolishness to those who disbelieve, yet it surpasses the wisdom of men, and is the power of God unto salvation, both to the converted Jew and Greek—that God has chosen the most despised among men to confound the learned Philosophers, and the great men of the Jews, who opposed themselves to the wisdom of the Gospel, showing by comparison the inferiority of all human attainments, that no flesh should have occasion to glory but in the Lord.

¹⁷ FOR Christ sent me not to baptize, but to preach the Gospel: ^anot with wisdom of ^bwords, lest the cross of Christ should be made of none effect. ¹⁸ For the preaching of the cross is to ^bthem that perish, ^cfoolishness; but unto us ^dwhich are saved it is the ^epower of God. ¹⁹ For it is ^fwritten,—

“I will destroy the wisdom of the wise,

And will bring to nothing the understanding of the prudent.”

²⁰ Where ^gis the wise? where is the Scribe? where is the disputer of this world? ^hhath not God made foolish the wisdom of this world?

²God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty; ²⁸and base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea, [and] ²⁹things which are not, ⁷to bring to nought things that are: ²⁹that ³no flesh should glory in his presence. ³⁰But of him are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us ¹wisdom, and ²righteousness, and ³sanctification, and ⁴redemption: ³¹that, according as it is ⁵written,—

§ 5.—chap. ii. 1–5.

St. Paul declares, that when he preached the Gospel to them, unlike their false teachers, he adorned it with no human learning or eloquence, but that his arguments were drawn from the testimony of divine revelation, confirmed by the power of miracles—therefore their faith should not be founded on the wisdom or philosophy of men.

¹ AND I, brethren, when I came to you, ^acame not with excellency of speech or of wisdom, declaring unto you ^bthe testimony of God. ²For I determined not to know any thing among you, ^csave Jesus Christ, and him crucified. ³And ^dI was with you ^ein weakness, and in fear, and in much trembling; ⁴and my speech and my preaching ^fwas not with ^genticing words of [man's] wisdom, ^hbut in demonstration of the Spirit and of power: ⁵that your faith should not ⁱstand in the wisdom of men, but ^jin the power of God.

The Apostle next shows, that, although he uses not worldly wisdom, the Corinthians have no cause to glory in their false teachers, for he (St. Paul) speaks the hidden mystery of God revealed to him by the Spirit, which no human industry or study could attain to; and declares to them, by the preaching of the Holy Ghost, the deep things of God, which can be revealed only by the Spirit of God, and cannot even be received by the natural or animal man, who has no other help but his human faculties.

⁶ HOWBEIT we speak wisdom among them ^athat are perfect; yet not ^bthe wisdom of this world, nor of the princes of this world, ^cthat come to nought: ⁷but we speak the wisdom of God in a mystery, even the hidden wisdom, ^dwhich God ordained before the world unto our glory; ⁸which ^enone of the princes of this world knew, (for ^fhad they known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory;) ⁹but as it is ^gwritten,—

Neither have entered into the heart of man,

The things which God hath prepared for them that love Him.”

¹⁰ But ^hGod hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit: for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God. ¹¹For what man knoweth the things of a man, ⁱsave the spirit of man which is in him? ^jeven so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God. ¹²Now we have received, not the spirit of the world, but ^kthe Spirit which is of God; that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God: ¹³which ^lthings also we speak, not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the [Holy] Ghost teacheth, comparing spiritual things with spiritual. ¹⁴But ^mthe natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; ⁿfor they are foolishness unto him; ^oneither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned. ¹⁵But ^phe that is spiritual ^qjudgeth all things, yet he himself is ^rjudged of no man. ¹⁶For ^swho hath known the mind of the Lord, that he ^tmay instruct Him? ^uBut we have the mind of Christ.

§ 7.—chap. iii. 1-9, and beginning of ver. 10.

St. Paul shows that divisions in a Church, arising from the opinions of the people on the various qualifications of their ministers, are destructive of spirituality.

¹ AND I, brethren, could not speak unto you as unto ^aspiritual, but as unto ^bcarnal, even as unto ^cbabes in Christ. ² I have fed you with ^dmilk, and not with meat: ^efor hitherto ye were not able to bear it, neither yet now are ye able. ³ For ye are yet carnal. For ^fwhereas there is among you envying, and strife, and ^gdivisions, are ye not carnal, and walk ^has men? ⁴ For while one saith, “I ⁱam of Paul;” and another, “I am of Apollos;” are ye not carnal?

⁵ Who then is Paul, and who is Apollos, but ^jministers by whom ye believed, ^keven as the Lord gave to every man? ⁶ I ^lhave planted, ^mApollos watered; ⁿbut God gave the increase: ⁷ so then ^oneither is he that planteth any thing, neither he that watereth; but God that giveth the increase. ⁸ Now he that planteth and he that watereth are one: ^pand every man shall receive his own reward according to his own labor. ⁹ For ^qwe are laborers together with God: ye are God’s husbandry, ye are ^rGod’s building. ¹⁰ According ^sto the grace of God which is given unto me, as a wise masterbuilder, I have laid ^tthe foundation, and another buildeth thereon.

Jesus Christ the only Foundation of Christianity—those who build upon this foundation are cautioned to take heed, as they must pass a severe examination—the teacher who has introduced false doctrines, will see his converts fall away in the time of persecution, as wood, hay, and stubble in the fire, escaping themselves with difficulty—On the other hand, with those who have built upon this Foundation sound and good doctrine, their converts, like silver and gold, will pass through the trial of fire, and the teacher himself will receive the reward of his labors.

St. Paul declares, that the teacher who wilfully introduces false doctrine into the Church will be destroyed, however successful in his attempt—The wisdom of this world is folly in the sight of God, therefore they should not glory in their teachers nor their boasted philosophy, making divisions in the Church—the true glory of a Christian is in Christ, who is God’s, through whom alone we obtain the promise of salvation, which cannot be given by the preachers of the Gospel.

¹⁶ KNOW ^{ad}ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you? ¹⁷ If any man ^{ae}defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are. ¹⁸ Let ^{af}no man deceive himself: if any man among you seemeth to be wise in this world, let him become a fool, that he may be wise. ¹⁹ For ^{ag}the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God. For it is ^{ah}written,—

²⁰ And ^{ai}again,—

²¹ Therefore ^{aj}let no man glory in men; for ^{ak}all things are yours;

The Apostles, as servants of Christ, are required to dispense the mysteries of the Gospel as men were prepared to receive them—In answer to the censure passed upon him by the false teachers, for not having instructed the Corinthians in the deeper doctrines of Christianity, St. Paul declares, it is of little moment to be condemned by man's judgment; for God alone can judge righteously, to whom only the secrets of the hearts are known—He exhorts them, therefore, not to pass judgment on their spiritual instructors

f Rom. 2. 29.
2 Cor. 5. 10.

¹ LET a man so account of us, as of ^athe ministers of Christ, ^band stewards of the mysteries of God; ² moreover it is required in stewards, that a man be found faithful. ³ But with me it is a very small thing that I should be judged of you, or of man's ^{*}judgment: yea, I judge not mine own self; ⁴ (for I know nothing by myself, ^cyet am I not hereby justified :) but He that judgeth me is the Lord. ⁵ Therefore ^djudge nothing before the time, until the Lord come, ^ewho both will bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and will make manifest the counsels of the hearts; and ^fthen shall every man have praise of God.

St. Paul declares he has made use of his own name, and that of Apollos, that they might learn not to think too highly of their separate leaders, and so become puffed up with anger and contempt for each other—St. Paul and Apollos were only the servants of Christ, by whose ministry the Christians had believed—They disclaimed all titles and distinctions among them, that by their example the Corinthians might learn not to esteem their teachers above what he had written—The Apostle then addresses himself to the false teachers—The former are called ignorant and foolish, because they preach the first article of the Christian faith: while the false teachers, from their speculations and traditions, are considered wise men and philosophers—The Apostles are despised—They are honored—The Apostles are exposed to every kind of danger, while they are in the full enjoyment of affluence and every comfort.

St. Paul declares he does not write these things to shame, but to instruct them, and to warn them against those false teachers who will not be to them as he was, their spiritual father—He therefore entreats them to imitate him, and sends Timotheus to them, who should remind them of his instruction.

¹⁴ I WRITE not these things to shame you, but ^aas my beloved sons I warn you. ¹⁵ For though ye have ten thousand instructors in Christ, yet have ye not many fathers; for ^bin Christ Jesus I have begotten you through the Gospel. ¹⁶ Wherefore I beseech you, ^cbe ye followers of me. ¹⁷ For this cause have I sent unto you ^dTimotheus, ^ewho is my beloved son, and faithful in the Lord, who shall bring you ^finto remembrance of my ways which be in Christ, as I ^gteach every where in every Church.

The false teacher having declared that St. Paul feared to encounter such learned and eloquent opposers, he declares his intention of visiting them shortly, when he would inquire not into the speech, but into the supernatural powers of his opposers, as the Gospel is not established by the boasted wisdom of its preachers, but in the miraculous powers which are imparted to them for its confirmation—He then asks them if his own supernatural powers should be exercised towards them in punishment, or if he should come to them in the spirit of peace and in love, on account of their having corrected their errors.

¹⁸ Now ^asome are puffed up, as though I would not come to you; ¹⁹ but ^bI will come to you shortly, ^cif the Lord will, and will know, not the speech of them which are puffed up, but the power. ²⁰ For ^dthe kingdom of God is not in word, but in power. ²¹ What will ye? ^eshall I come unto you with a rod, or in love, and in the spirit of meekness?

St. Paul commands the public excommunication of the incestuous person—He condemns their boasting in the knowledge of their false teacher, who has tolerated this enormity, and shows the infectious nature of sin, by comparing it to leaven—They are prohibited from associating with Christians openly profane, who are to be delivered over to the censure of the Church—But the wicked heathen, as being without the pale of the Church, are to be left to the judgment of God.

⁹ I wrote unto you in an ^tepistle, “Not ^uto company with fornicators.” ¹⁰ Yet ^vnot altogether with the fornicators ^wof this world, or with the covetous, or extortioners, or with idolators; for then must ye needs go ^xout of the world. ¹¹ But now I have written unto you, Not to keep company, ^y“if any man that is called a brother be a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolator, or a railer, or a drunkard, or an extortioner; with such an one ^zno not to eat. ¹² For what have I to do to judge ^{aa}them also that are without? Do not ye judge ^{ab}them that are within? ¹³ but them that are without God judgeth. Therefore ^{ac}put away from among yourselves that wicked person.

The Apostle here confutes the arguments of the false teacher, by which he appears to have sanctioned luxury and fornication, and declares that no unclean person can inherit the blessings of the Gospel—The immoderate indulgence of things in themselves lawful is sinful in Christians, who are God's both by creation and redemption.

¹² All ^dthings are lawful unto me, but all things are not ^eexpedient: all things are lawful for me, but I will not be brought under the power of any. ¹³ Meats ^efor the belly, and the belly for meats: but God shall destroy both it and them. Now the body is not for fornication, but ^ffor the Lord, ^gand the Lord for the body; ¹⁴ and ^hGod hath both raised up the Lord, and will also raise up us ⁱby his own power. ¹⁵ Know ye not that ^jyour bodies are the members of Christ? shall I then take the members of Christ, and make them the members of a harlot? God forbid! ¹⁶ What? know ye not that he which is joined to a harlot is one body? for ^ktwo, saith He, shall be one flesh. ¹⁷ But ^lhe that is joined unto the Lord is one spirit. ¹⁸ Flee ^mfornication. Every sin that a man doeth is without the body; but he that committeth fornication sinneth ⁿagainst his own body. ¹⁹ What? ^oknow ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God, ^pand ye are not your own? ²⁰ For ^qye are bought with a price: therefore glorify God in your body, [and in your spirit, which are God's].

St. Paul proceeds to answer the questions of the Corinthians, and gives rules of conduct both to married and single persons, according to their several tempers, and to the present state of the Church in a time of persecution.

b Ex. 21. 10.
1 Pet. 3. 7.

¹ Now concerning the things whereof ye wrote unto me: ^a*It is* good for a man not to touch a woman; ² nevertheless, to avoid fornication, let every man have his own wife, and let every woman have her own husband. ³ Let ^bthe husband render unto the wife due [benevolence]: and likewise also the wife unto the husband. ⁴ The wife hath not power of her own body, but the husband: and likewise also the husband hath not power of his own body, but the wife. ⁵ Defraud ^cye not one the other, except it be with consent for a time, that ye may give yourselves to fasting and prayer; and come together again, that ^dSatan tempt you not for your incontinency. ^eBut I speak this by permission: ^fand not of commandment. ^gFor ^hI would that all men were ⁱeven as I myself; but ^jevery man hath his proper gift of God, one after this manner, and another after that.

^kI say therefore to the unmarried and widows, ^lIt is good for them if they abide even as I. ^mBut ⁿif they cannot contain, let them marry: for it is better to marry than to burn. ^oAnd unto the married I command, ^pyet not I, but the Lord, ^qLet not the wife depart from her husband; ^r(but and if she depart, let her remain unmarried, or be reconciled to her husband:) and let not the husband put away his wife. ^sBut to the rest speak I, ^tnot the Lord: If any brother hath a wife that believeth not, and she be pleased to dwell with him, let him not put her away; ^uand the woman which hath a husband that believeth not, and if he be pleased to dwell with her, let her not leave him. ^vFor the unbelieving husband is sanctified by the wife, and the unbelieving wife is sanctified by the husband: else ^wwere your children unclean; but now are they holy. ^xBut if the unbelieving depart, let him depart. A brother or a sister is not under bondage in such cases. But God hath ^ycalled us ^zto peace. ^{aa}For what knowest thou, O wife! whether thou shalt ^{ab}save thy husband? or ^{ac}thow knowest thou, O man! whether thou shalt save thy wife? ^{ad}But as God hath distributed to every man, as the Lord hath called every one, so let him walk; and ^{ae}so ordain I in all Churches.

St. Paul teaches that Christianity makes no change in the common relations and natural obligations of life.

^{af}Is any man called being circumcised? let him ^{ag}not become uncircumcised. Is any called in uncircumcision? ^{ah}let him not be circumcised. ^{ai}Circumcision ^{aj}is nothing, and uncircumcision is nothing, but ^{ak}the keeping of the commandments of God. ^{al}Let every man abide in the same calling wherein he was called. ^{am}Art thou called being a servant? care not for it: but if thou mayest be made free, use it rather. ^{an}For he that is called in the Lord, being a servant, is ^{ao}the Lord's ^{ap}freeman: likewise also he that is called, being free, is ^{aq}Christ's servant. ^{ar}Ye ^{as}are bought with a price; be not ye the servants of men. ^{at}Brethren, ^{au}let every man, wherein he is called, therein abide with God.

St. Paul recommends both virgins and widows to continue unmarried in times of persecution; and, to make them less solicitous about the present cares and pleasures of life, he reminds them of its shortness and insignificance.

^{av}Now concerning virgins ^{aw}I have no commandment of the Lord: yet I give my judgment, as one ^{ax}that hath obtained mercy of the Lord ^{ay}to be faithful. ^{az}I suppose therefore that this is good for the present ^{ba}distress, ^{bb}I say, ^{bc}that it is good for a man so to be. ^{bd}Art thou bound unto a wife? seek not to be loosed. Art thou loosed from a wife? seek not a wife. ^{be}But and if thou marry, thou hast not sinned; and if a virgin marry, she hath not sinned; nevertheless such shall have trouble in the flesh: but I spare you. ^{bf}But ^{bg}this I say, brethren, the time is short: it remaineth, that both they that have wives be as though they had none; ^{bh}and they that weep, as though they wept not; and they that rejoice, as though they rejoiced not; and they that buy, as though they possessed not; ^{bi}and they that use this world, as not ^{bj}abusing it. For ^{bk}the fashion of this world passeth away. ^{bl}But I would have you without ^hcarefulness. He that is unmarried careth for the things [†]that belong to the Lord, how he may please the Lord; ³³ but he that is married careth for the things that are of the world, how he may please his wife. ³⁴ There is difference also between a wife and a virgin; the unmarried woman ⁱcareth for the things of the Lord, that she may be holy both in body and in spirit: but she that is married careth for the things of the world, how she may please her husband. ³⁵ And this I speak for your own profit; not that I may cast a snare upon you, but for that which is comely, and that ye may attend upon the Lord without distraction.

³⁶ But if any man think that he behaveth himself uncomely toward his virgin, if she pass the flower of her age, and need so require, let him do what he will, he sinneth not; let them marry. ³⁷ Nevertheless he that standeth steadfast in his heart, having no necessity, but hath power over his own will, and hath so decreed in his heart that he will keep his virgin, doeth well. ³⁸ So ^jthen he that giveth her in marriage doeth well; but he that giveth her not in marriage doeth better.

³⁹ The ^kwife is bound by the law as long as her husband liveth; but if her husband be dead, she is at liberty to be married to whom she will; ^lonly in the Lord. ⁴⁰ But she is happier if she so abide, ^mafter my judgment: and ⁿI think also that I have the Spirit of God.

St. Paul, in reply to the converts, instructs them that though the eating of things offered to idols was indifferent in itself, the custom was to be avoided, as their example might lead the weaker brethren into sin, by encouraging them in the idea that their idol is a real God.

⁸ But ^omeat commendeth us not to God: for neither, if we eat, [†]are we the better; neither, if we eat not, [‡]are we the worse. ⁹ But ^ptake heed lest by any means this ^qliberty of yours become ^aa stumbling-block to them that are weak. ¹⁰ For if any man see thee which hast knowledge sit at meat in ^rthe idol's temple, shall not ^sthe conscience of him which is weak be ^temboldened to eat those things which are offered to idols? ¹¹ and ^uthrough thy knowledge shall the weak brother perish for whom Christ died? ¹² But ^vwhen ye sin so against the brethren, and wound their weak conscience, ye sin against Christ. ¹³ Wherefore, ^vif meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no flesh while the world standeth, lest I make my brother to offend.

The Apostle here vindicates his Apostleship by appealing to their own conversion from Heathenism, and the spiritual gifts he had conferred upon them—He argues against the objections made to his apostolic character by his enemies, whose views and conduct were totally opposite to his own; by asserting, that although he declined receiving maintenance from the Corinthians, he was fully entitled to demand it both for himself and for his sister, or wife, as well as the other Apostles—He defends his right to a maintenance from the common practice of mankind; by the Law of Moses; and likewise by the express command of Christ.

¹ AM ^aI not an apostle? am I not free? ^bhave I not seen Jesus Christ our Lord? ^care not ye my work in the Lord? ² If I be not an apostle unto others, yet doubtless I am to you: for ^dthe seal of mine apostleship are ye in the Lord. ³ Mine answer to them that do examine me is this, ⁴ Have ^ewe not power to eat and to drink?

⁵ Have we not power to lead about a sister, a ^fwife, as well as other apostles, and ^{as} ^gthe brethren of the Lord, and ^hCephas? ⁶ Or I only and Barnabas, ⁱhave not we power to forbear working? ⁷ Who ^jgoeth a warfare any time at his own charges? who ^kplanteth a vineyard, and eateth not of the fruit thereof? or who ^lfeedeth a flock, and eateth not of the milk of the flock? ⁸ Say I these things as a man? or saith not the Law the same also? ⁹ For it is written in the ^lLaw of Moses, “Thou shalt not muzzle the mouth of the ox that treadeth out the corn.” Doth God take care for oxen? ¹⁰ Or saith he it altogether for our sakes? For our sakes, no doubt, this is written: that ^mhe that ploweth should plow in hope; and that he that thresheth in hope should be partaker of his hope. ¹¹ If ⁿwe have sown unto you spiritual things, is it a great thing if we shall reap your carnal things? ¹² If others be partakers of this power over you, are not we rather? ^oNevertheless we have not used this power; but suffer all things, ^plest we should hinder the Gospel of Christ. ¹³ Do ^qye not know that they which minister about holy things ^rlive of the things of the temple? and they which wait at the altar are partakers with the altar? ¹⁴ Even so ^shath the Lord ordained that they which preach the Gospel should live of the Gospel.

St. Paul gives his reasons for not having asserted his right to a maintenance from the Christian Church at Corinth, in the fear that by burthening them he might make the Gospel less successful—He declares his great desire to excel in his ministry; contenting himself with the indispensable duty of preaching, he shows his condescension and conformity to the weaknesses and prejudices of all sorts of people, that he might win them to Christ—The Apostle (v. 24.) proves the propriety of his conduct in thus exposing himself to hardships and unnecessary labors, by an allusion to the customs of their own countrymen, who hope to obtain only a corruptible crown; and invites all the converts to follow his example, being encouraged with the certain hope of an incorruptible one—They are exhorted to a life of continued self-denial and abstinence.

¹⁵ BUT ^aI have used none of these things: neither have I written these things, that it should be so done unto me. For ^bit were better for me to die, than that any man should make my glorying void. ¹⁶ For though I preach the Gospel, I have nothing to glory of: for ^cnecessity is laid upon me. Yea, woe is unto me, if I preach not the Gospel. ¹⁷ For if I do this thing willingly, ^dI have a reward: but if against my will, ^ea dispensation of the Gospel is committed unto me. ¹⁸ What is my reward then? ^fVerily that, ^gwhen I preach the Gospel, I may make the Gospel of Christ without charge; that I ^habuse not my power in the Gospel. ¹⁹ For though I be ⁱfree from all men, yet have ^jI made myself servant unto all, ^kthat I might gain the more; ²⁰ and ^lunto the Jews I became as a Jew, that I might gain the Jews; to them that are under the Law, as under the Law, [being not myself under the Law,] that I might gain them that are under the Law; ²¹ to ^mthem that are without law, as without law (being ⁿnot without law to God, but under law to Christ), that I might gain them that are without law. ²² To ^othe weak became I as weak, that I might gain the weak. ^pI am made all things to all men, ²that I might by all means save some.

²⁴ Know ye not that they which run in a race run all, but one receiveth the prize? ²⁵ So run, that ye may obtain. ²⁵ And every man that ²⁷striveth for the mastery is temperate in all things: now they do it to obtain a corruptible crown; but we ²⁶an incorruptible. ²⁶ I therefore so run, ²⁷not as uncertainly; so fight I, not as one that beateth the air: ²⁷but ²⁸"I keep under my body, and ²⁹bring it into subjection: lest that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be ³⁰a castaway.

The Apostle, from the conduct of the Israelites of old, wishes to convince the Corinthians that as the favored people of God were so severely punished for their irregularities and idolatry, so also the Christians, under the Gospel dispensation, who indulge in the same sinful conduct and gratifications, will be as certainly punished as the Israelites under the Law—He cautions them from these examples to avoid the same offences, and warns them not to have too much confidence in themselves, as being members of the Christian Church, but to take heed lest they also fall into sin.

¹² Now these things were ¹³four examples, to the intent we should not lust after evil things, as ¹⁴they also lusted. ¹⁵ Neither ¹⁶be ye idolators, as were some of them; as it is ¹⁷written, "The people sat down to eat and drink, and rose up to play." ¹⁸ Neither ¹⁹let us commit fornication, as some of them committed, and ²⁰fell in one day three and twenty thousand. ²¹ Neither let us tempt Christ, as ²²some of them also tempted, and ²³were destroyed of serpents. ²⁴ Neither murmur ye, as ²⁵some of them also murmured, and ²⁶were destroyed of ²⁷the Destroyer. ²⁸ Now all these things happened unto them for ²⁹tensamples: and ³⁰they are written for our admonition, ³¹upon whom the ends of the world are come. ³² Wherefore ³³let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall!

The Corinthians, exposed only to similar temptations as others, are exhorted to abstain from idolatry, and from eating of things offered to idols—The Apostle proves by a reference to our own communion, and to the ceremonial Law, that by such an action there was an outward worshipping of the demons on whose sacrifices they feasted, and to whom they united themselves—The worship of the true God and idols incompatible, and derogatory to the honor of Christ.

¹³ THERE hath no temptation taken you but ¹⁴such as is common to man: but ¹⁵God is faithful, ¹⁶who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation also ¹⁷make a way to escape, that [ye] may be able to bear it.

¹⁸ Wherefore, my dearly beloved, ¹⁹flee from idolatry. ²⁰ I speak as to ²¹wise men; judge ye what I say: ²²the ²³cup of blessing which we bless, is it not the communion of the blood of Christ? ²⁴The bread which we break, is it not the communion of the body of Christ? ²⁵ For ²⁶we being many are one bread and one body: for we are all partakers of that One Bread. ²⁷ Behold ²⁸Israel after the flesh: ²⁹are not they which eat of the sacrifices partakers of the altar? ³⁰ What say I then? ³¹that the idol is any thing, or that which is offered in sacrifice to idols is any thing? ²⁰ But I say, that the things which the Gentiles 'sacrifice, they sacrifice to devils, and not to God: and I would not that ye should have fellowship with devils. ²¹ Ye ^mcannot drink the cup of the Lord, and ⁿthe cup of devils: ye cannot be partakers of the Lord's Table, and of the table of devils. ²² Do we ^oprovoke the Lord to jealousy? ^pare we stronger than he?

St. Paul, affirms, that though all meats under the Gospel dispensation were lawful, in opposition to the false teachers, he declares them not expedient, as the edification of others should be the first consideration—The Corinthians are permitted to eat whatever was sold in the shambles, or placed on the table of a heathen, unless by so doing they offend the conscience of weaker brethren—Christians are required to consult, even in the most indifferent actions, the glory of God, and the advantage of others, rather than their own inclinations—They are called upon to follow the disinterestedness of St. Paul, who followed Christ.

²³ ALL ^athings are lawful [for me], but all things are not expedient: all things are lawful [for me], but all things edify not. ²⁴ Let ^bno man seek his own, but [every man] another's ^cwealth. ²⁵ Whatsoever ^dis sold in the shambles, that eat, asking no question for conscience' sake, ²⁶ for ^ethe earth is the ^fLord's, and the fulness thereof. ²⁷ If any of them that believe not bid you to a feast, and ye be disposed to go; ^gwhatsoever is set before you, eat, asking no question for conscience' sake. ²⁸ But if any man say unto you, "This is offered in sacrifice unto idols," eat not ^hfor his sake that showed it, and for conscience' sake: [for ⁱthe earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof.] ²⁹ Conscience, I say, not thine own, but of the other. For ^jwhy is my liberty judged of another man's conscience? ³⁰ for if I by ^kgrace be a partaker, why am I evil spoken of for that ^lfor which I give thanks? ³¹ Whether ^mtherefore ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God. ³² Give ⁿnone offence, neither to the Jews, nor to the ^oGentiles, nor to ^pthe Church of God: ³³ even as ^qI please all men in all things, ^rnot seeking mine own profit, but the profit of many, that they may be saved. ¹ Be ^sye followers of me, even as I also am of Christ.

St. Paul commends them for having observed his ordinances—He explains their nature, by showing the subordination of all men to Christ, of the woman to the man, and the subordination of Christ to God—The veil being a mark of inferiority and subjection, women are forbidden to appear unveiled.

² Now, I praise you, brethren, ^athat ye remember me in all things, and ^bkeep the ^cordinances, as I delivered them to you. ³ But I would have you know, that ^dthe head of every man is Christ; and ^ethe head of the woman is the man; and ^fthe head of Christ is God. ⁴ Every man praying or ^gprophesying, having his head covered, dishonoreth his head. ⁵ But ^hevery woman that prayeth or prophesieth with her head uncovered dishonoreth her head: for that is even all one as if she were ⁱshaven. ⁶ For if the woman be not covered, let her also be shorn: but if it be ^ja shame for a woman to be shorn or shaven, let her be covered. ⁷ For a man indeed ought not to cover his head, forasmuch as ^khe is the image and glory of God: but the woman is the glory of the man. ⁸ For ^lthe man is not of the woman, but the woman of the man; ⁹ neither ^mwas the man created for the woman, but the woman for the man. ¹⁰ For this cause ought the woman ⁿto have ^opower on her head ^pbecause of the angels.^k ¹¹ Nevertheless ^qneither is the man without the woman, neither the woman without the man, in the Lord; ¹² for as the woman is of the man, even so is the man also by the woman, ^rbut all things of God. ¹³ Judge in yourselves: is it comely that a woman pray unto God uncovered? ¹⁴ Doth not even nature itself

§ 27.—chap. xi. 17, to the end.

The Apostle reproves them for their divisions and separate parties, when they meet together for the celebration of the Lord's Supper—They are required not only to assemble themselves in one place, but to receive the Lord's Supper as one body, uniting in commemorating the death of Christ—He condemns them for bringing meat into the Church, and joining it to the Lord's Supper, profaning the holy ordinance—To correct these disorders, the Apostle gives an account of the institution of the Eucharist, with directions for its due observance.

¹⁷ Now in this that I declare unto you I praise you not, that ye come together not for the better, but for the worse. ¹⁸ For first of all, when ye come together in the Church, ^aI hear that there be ^{*}divisions among you; and I partly believe it; ¹⁹ for ^bthere must be also ^ctheresies among you, ^ethat they which are approved may be made manifest among you. ²⁰ When you come together therefore into one place, [†]this is not to eat the Lord's Supper; ²¹ for in eating every one taketh before other his own supper: and one is hungry, and ^danother is drunken. ²² What! have ye not houses to eat and to drink in? or despise ye ^ethe Church of God, and ^fshame ^{*}them that have not? What shall I say to you? shall I praise you in this? I praise you not.

²³ For ^gI have received of the Lord that which also I delivered unto you, ^hThat the Lord Jesus the same night in which he was betrayed took bread; ²⁴ and when he had given thanks, he brake it, and said, “[Take, eat:] this is my body, which is broken for you: this do ⁱin remembrance of me.” ²⁵ After the same manner also he took the cup, when he had supped, saying, “This cup is the new testament in my blood: this do ye, as oft as ye drink it, in remembrance of me.” ²⁶ For as often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, [†]ye do show the Lord's death ⁱtill He come. ²⁷ Wherefore, ^jwhosoever shall eat this bread, and drink this cup of the Lord, unworthily, shall be guilty of the body and blood of the Lord. ²⁸ But ^klet a man examine himself, and so let him eat of that bread, and drink of that cup; ²⁹ for he that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh ^{*}damnation to himself, not discerning the Lord's body. ³⁰ For this cause many are weak and sickly among you, and many sleep. ³¹ For ^lif we would judge ourselves, we should not be judged; ³² but when we are judged, ^mwe are chastened of the Lord, that we should not be condemned with the world. ³³ Wherefore, my brethren, when ye come together to eat, tarry one for another; ³⁴ and if any man ⁿhunger, let him eat at ^ohome, that ye come not together unto [†]condemnation. And the rest ^pwill I set in order when ^qI come.

The power of Christ shown to be superior to that of idols, by the spiritual gifts he imparted—The Christians are desired to judge of the inspiration of their teachers by the doctrines they taught—Spiritual gifts, however various, derived from one and the same Holy Spirit, and for the same end, the common benefit of the Christian Church—Which is exemplified, by a comparison to the human body and its members.

¹ Now ^aconcerning spiritual gifts, brethren, I would not have you ignorant. ² Ye know ^bthat ye were Gentiles, carried away unto these ^cdumb idols, even as ye were led; ³ wherefore I give you to understand, ^dthat no man speaking by the Spirit of God calleth Jesus ^{*}accursed; and that ^eno man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost. ⁴ Now ^fthere are diversities of gifts, but ^gthe same Spirit; ⁵ and ^hthere are differences of [†]administrations, but the same Lord;

¹²For ^tas the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of that [one] body, being many, are one body: ^uso also is Christ. ¹³For ^vby one Spirit are we all baptized into one body, ^wwhether we be Jews or ^xGentiles, whether we be bond or free; and ^yhave been all made to drink into one Spirit. ¹⁴For the body is not one member, but many. ¹⁵If the foot shall say, Because I am not the hand, I am not of the body; is it therefore not of the body? ¹⁶And if the ear shall say, Because I am not the eye, I am not of the body; is it therefore not of the body? ¹⁷If the whole body were an eye, where were the hearing? If the whole were hearing, where were the smelling? ¹⁸But now hath ^zGod set the members every one of them in the body, ^aas it hath pleased Him. ¹⁹And if they were all one member, where were the body? ²⁰But now are they many members, yet but one body. ²¹And the eye cannot say unto the hand, I have no need of thee: nor again the head to the feet, I have no need of you. ²²Nay, much more those members of the body, which seem to be more feeble, are necessary; ²³and those members of the body, which we think to be less honorable, upon these we ^bbestow more abundant honor; and our uncomely parts have more abundant comeliness; ²⁴for our comely parts have no need. But God hath tempered the body together, having given more abundant honor to that part which lacked; ²⁵that there should be no ^cschism in the body; but that the members should have the same care one for another. ²⁶And whether one member suffer, all the members suffer with it; or one member be honored, all the members rejoice with it. ²⁷Now ^dye are the body of Christ, and ^emembers in particular. ²⁸And ^fGod hath set some in the Church, first ^gApostles, secondarily, ^hProphets, thirdly, Teachers, after that ⁱmiracles, then, ^jgifts of healings, ^khelps, ^lgovernments, ^m*diversities* of tongues. ²⁹Are all apostles? are all prophets? are all teachers? are all ⁿworkers of miracles? ³⁰have all the gifts of healing? do all speak with tongues? do all interpret?

Charity founded on the love of God is preferable to the best spiritual gifts.

³¹BUT ^acovet earnestly the best gifts; and yet show I unto you a more excellent way.—¹Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not charity, I am become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal. ²And though I have the gift of ^bprophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge; and though I have all faith, ^cso that I could remove mountains, and have not charity, I am nothing. ³And ^dthough I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned, and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing.

“ With men of other tongues and other lips
Will I speak unto this people ;
And yet for all that will they not hear me, saith the LORD.”

²² Wherefore tongues are for a sign, not to them that believe, but to them that believe not: but prophesying serveth not for them that believe not, but for them which believe. ²³ If therefore the whole Church be come together into one place, and all speak with tongues, and there come in those that are unlearned, or unbelievers, 'will they not say that ye are mad? ²⁴ But if all prophesy, and there come in one that believeth not, or one unlearned, he is convinced of all, he is judged of all, ²⁵ and thus are the secrets of his heart made manifest; and so falling down on his face he will worship God, and report ^mthat God is in you of a truth.

St. Paul gives directions for the most profitable way of exercising their gifts in the public assemblies—Women are forbidden to speak in the Churches—He submits the truth of his doctrine to those who were discerners of spirits—He commands that every thing be done in their Churches both decently, and according to the observances already established among Christians.

²⁶ How is it then, brethren? when ye come together, every one of you hath a psalm, ^ahath a doctrine, hath a tongue, hath a revelation, hath an interpretation: ^blet all things be done unto edifying. ²⁷ If any man speak in an unknown tongue, let it be by two, or at the most by three, and that by course; and let one interpret. ²⁸ But if there be no interpreter, let him keep silence in the Church; and let him speak to himself, and to God. ²⁹ Let the prophets speak two or three, and ^clet the other judge; ³⁰ if any thing be revealed to another that sitteth by, ^dlet the first hold his peace. ³¹ For ye may all prophesy one by one, that all may learn, and all may be comforted; ³² and ^ethe spirits of the prophets are subject to the prophets; ³³ for God is not the author of ^fconfusion, but of peace, ^gas in all Churches of the saints.

The disbelief of the resurrection is inconsistent with the nature of our baptismal profession, and encourages licentiousness—He exhorts them not to be deceived.

St. Paul answers the philosophical objections raised to the resurrection of the dead, from the analogy of the growth of a plant from its seed—He shows that the human body, which is committed to the ground, will in the same manner rise again at the resurrection, changed in its properties, and more beautiful in its form.

³⁵ BUT some man will say, "How are the dead raised up? and with what body do they come?" ³⁶ Thou fool! ^b that which thou sowest is not quickened, except it die: ³⁷ and that which thou sowest, thou sowest not that body that shall be, but bare grain, it may chance of wheat or of some other grain: ³⁸ but God giveth it a body as it hath pleased him, and to every seed his own body. ³⁹ All flesh is not the same flesh: but there is one kind of [flesh] of men, another flesh of beasts, another of fishes, and another of birds. ⁴⁰ There are also celestial bodies, and bodies terrestrial: but the glory of the celestial is one, and the glory of the terrestrial is another. ⁴¹ There is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon, and another glory of the stars: for one star differeth from another star in glory. ⁴² So ^c also is the resurrection of the dead. It is sown in corruption—it is raised in incorruption: ⁴³ it ^d is sown in dishonor—it is raised in glory: it is sown in weakness—it is raised in power: ⁴⁴ it is sown a natural body—it is raised a spiritual body. There is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body.

The Truth of the Resurrection proved to the Jews by the analogy between the first and the second Adam.

⁴⁵ AND so it is written, The first man Adam ^a was made a living soul; ^b the last Adam was made ^c a quickening spirit. ⁴⁶ Howbeit that was not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural; and afterward that which is spiritual. ⁴⁷ The ^d first man is of the earth, ^e earthy: the second man is the Lord ^f from heaven. ⁴⁸ As is the earthy, such are they also that are earthy: ^g and as is the heavenly, such are they also that are heavenly; ⁴⁹ and ^h as we have borne the image of the earthy, ⁱ we shall also bear the image of the heavenly.

St. Paul asserts that our present bodies cannot be admitted into a spiritual state—He describes the manner of the resurrection, and the glorious change which will take place in a state of immortality, with the complete victory over sin and death—From these considerations the Corinthians are exhorted to an active and steadfast faith.

SECTION VII.—St. Paul continues at Ephesus—A Tumult is occasioned at that place by Demetrius.^m

Acts xix. latter part of ver. 22, to the end.

²² BUT he himself staid in Asia for a season. ²³ And ^athe same time there arose no small stir about ^bthat way. ²⁴ For a certain man named Demetrius, a silversmith, which made silver shrines for Diana, brought ^cno small gain unto the craftsmen. ²⁵ Whom he called together with the workmen of like occupation, and said, “Sirs, ye know that by this craft we have our wealth ; ²⁶ moreover ye see and hear, that not alone at Ephesus, but almost throughout all Asia, this Paul hath persuaded and turned away much people, saying that ^dthey be no gods, which are made with hands. ²⁷ So that not only this our craft is in danger to be set at nought; but also that the temple of the great goddess Diana should be despised, and her magnificence should be destroyed, whom all Asia and the world worshippeth."

³⁵ And when the townclerk had appeased the people, he said, "Ye men of Ephesus! what man is there that knoweth not how that the city of the Ephesians is ^{*}a worshipper of the great goddess Diana, and of the image which fell down from Jupiter? ³⁶ Seeing then that these things cannot be spoken against, ye ought to be quiet, and to do nothing rashly. ³⁷ For ye have brought hither these men, which are neither robbers of churches, nor yet blasphemers of your goddess. ³⁸ Wherefore if Demetrius, and the craftsmen which are with him, have a matter against any man, [†]the law is open, and there are deputies; let them implead one another. ³⁹ But if ye inquire any thing concerning other matters, it shall be determined in a [‡]lawful assembly. ⁴⁰ For we are in danger to be called in question for this day's uproar, there being no cause whereby we may give an account of this course." ⁴¹ And when he had thus spoken, he dismissed the assembly.

In opposition to the Judaizing Christians, St. Paul commands the Christian converts, in the benevolent spirit of the Gospel, to pray for all men, whether Jews or Gentiles: and especially for kings, and those in authority, of whatsoever nation or country—He declares this to be acceptable in the sight of God, who would have all men saved, and with whom there is only one Mediator between God and men of all nations—St. Paul is appointed to make these truths known to the Gentiles as well as to the Jews.

The qualifications of a Bishop, superintendent over several congregations, and of a Minister over one congregation, are described.

§ 9.—chap. iii. 8–13.

The qualifications of the Deacons are enumerated; their wives are to be examples to the people.

 St. Paul encourages Timothy in his episcopal and ministerial duties by reminding him of the sublimer doctrines of the Christian religion.

14 THESE things write I unto thee, hoping to come unto thee shortly ;
 15 but if I tarry long, that thou mayest know how thou oughtest to behave thyself ^ain the house of God, which is the Church of the living God, ^bthe pillar and ^cground of the truth. 16 And without controversy great is the mystery of godliness ; ^dGod was ^emanifest in the flesh, ^fjustified in the Spirit, ^gseen of angels, ^hpreached unto the Gentiles, ⁱbelieved on in the world, ^kreceived up into glory.

 By the Spirit of God St. Paul foretells the apostasy of the Christian Church, and describes the character of its corruptions ; intimating thereby that the Judaizing teachers were some of those who were preparing its way—Timothy is cautioned against all tendencies to these corruptions, and exhorted to inculcate the practice of virtue and piety, as the only profitable and acceptable service of a Christian ; and he is enjoined to enforce this important truth, although for so doing he will be reproached and persecuted.

1 Now the Spirit ^aspeaketh expressly, that ^bin the latter times, some shall depart from the faith, giving heed ^cto seducing spirits, ^dand doctrines of devils ; ^espeaking ^flies in hypocrisy ; ^ghaving their conscience seared with a hot iron ; ^hforbidding ⁱto marry, ^kand ^lcommanding to abstain from meats, which God hath created ^mto be received ⁿwith thanksgiving of them which believe and know the truth. 4 For ^oevery creature of God is good, and nothing to be refused, if it be received with thanksgiving ; 5 for it is sanctified by the word of God and prayer.

6 If thou put the brethren in remembrance of these things, thou shalt be a good minister of Jesus Christ, ^pnourished up in the words of faith and of good doctrine, whereunto thou hast attained. 7 But ^qrefuse profane and old wives' fables, and ^rexercise thyself rather unto godliness. 8 For ^sbodily exercise profiteth ^tlittle ; ^ubut godliness is profitable unto all things, ^vhaving promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come. 9 This ^wis a faithful saying and worthy of all acceptance ; 10 for therefore ^xwe both labor and suffer reproach, because we ^ytrust in the living God, ^zwho is the Saviour of all men, specially of those that believe. 11 These ^{aa}things command and teach.

St. Paul gives Timothy directions as to his own conduct, and warns him to put away all subjects of speculative teaching—To become an example to the Church—To devote himself to the ministry, to reading, study, meditation, and self-government ; for in so doing he should save himself, and be made the instrument of salvation to others.

12 LET ^ano man despise thy youth ; but ^bbe thou an example of the believers, in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity. 13 Till I come, give attendance to reading, to exhortation, to doctrine. 14 Neglect ^cnot the gift that is in thee, which was given thee ^dby prophecy, ^ewith the laying on of the hands of the presbytery. 15 Meditate upon these things ; give thyself wholly to them ; that thy profiting may appear ^fto all. 16 Take ^gheed unto thyself, and unto the doctrine ; continue in them : for in doing this thou shalt both ^hsave thyself, and ⁱthem that hear thee.

Further directions are given to Timothy for the better success of his teaching—He is instructed as to his conduct to the elders, to young men and women, and to widows who were maintained by the charity of the Church—None were to be admitted under sixty years of age, lest if younger women were received, and forbidden to marry, they might renounce Christianity, or bring disgrace upon the Christian name.

⁹Let not a widow be ⁿtaken into the number under threescore years old, ^ohaving been the wife of one man, ¹⁰well reported of for good works; if she have brought up children, if she have ^plodged strangers, if she have ^qwashed the saints' feet, if she have relieved the afflicted, if she have diligently followed every good work. ¹¹But the younger widows refuse; for when they have begun to wax wanton against Christ, they will marry; ¹²having damnation, because they have cast off their first faith; ¹³and ^rwithal they learn to be idle, wandering about from house to house; and not only idle, but tattlers also and busybodies, speaking things which they ought not. ¹⁴I ^swill therefore that the younger women marry, bear children, guide the house, ^tgive none occasion to the adversary ^uto speak reproachfully. ¹⁵For some are already turned aside after Satan. ¹⁶If any man or woman that believeth have widows, let them relieve them, and let not the Church be charged; that it may relieve ^vthem that are widows indeed.

Timothy is directed in his conduct towards the Elders, or the Pastors of the Church—Good ministers worthy of double honor and emolument—A suitable provision to be made by the Church for them—The Elders are to be reprov'd only on the fullest evidence, and then publicly, as a warning for others—Timothy is solemnly charged to be strictly impartial in his government, and to ordain Elders with the greatest care and circumspection, after a faithful examination into their characters, that he may be pure from any future act of guilt, or misconduct—St. Paul advises him, in a parenthesis, as to his health.

The Judaizing teachers condemned, who hold different doctrines, absolving men from their civil duties—They are reprov'd for their controversies and strifes of words, and for preferring their own temporal gain to the honor of God, and the advancement of his truth—Contentment is enforced in every station, from the vanity of all earthly possessions—The great danger of an immoderate love of riches.

¹² FOR our rejoicing is this, the testimony of our conscience, that in simplicity and ^agodly sincerity, (^bnot with fleshly wisdom, but by the grace of God,) we have had our conversation in the world, and more abundantly to you-ward. ¹³ For we write none other things unto you, than what ye read or acknowledge ; and I trust ye shall acknowledge even to the end ; ¹⁴ as also ye have acknowledged us in part, 'that we are your rejoicing, even as ^dye also are ours in the day of the Lord Jesus.

The false teacher having accused St. Paul of irresolution and carnal-mindedness, because he failed in his promised visit to the Corinthians, the Apostle shows his consistency in the uniformity of the doctrine which he taught, and appeals to the unction of the Holy Spirit, by which God had fully established his authority among them—He solemnly declares his true reason for delaying his visit proceeded from his wish to spare them—He assures them that he wrote in the deepest affliction, instead of coming to punish them, that he might have joy in their repentance, and convince them of the greatness of his love.

¹⁵ AND in this confidence ^aI was minded to come unto you before, that ye might ^bhave a second ^{*}benefit ; ¹⁶ and to pass by you into Macedonia, and ^cto come again out of Macedonia unto you, and of you to be brought on my way toward Judæa. ¹⁷ When I therefore was thus minded, did I use lightness ? or the things that I purpose, do I purpose ^daccording to the flesh, that with me there should be yea yea, and nay nay ? ¹⁸ But as God is true, our [†]tword toward you was not yea and nay ! ¹⁹ For ^ethe Son of God, Jesus Christ, who was preached among you by us (even by me and Silvanus and Timotheus), was not yea and nay, ^fbut in him was yea, ²⁰ (for ^gall the promises of God in him are yea, and in him Amen,) unto the glory of God by us. ²¹ Now He which stablisheth us with you in Christ, and ^hhath anointed us, is God ; ²² who ⁱhath also sealed us, and ^jgiven the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts.

²³ Moreover ^kI call God for a record upon my soul, ^lthat to spare you I came not as yet unto Corinth ! ²⁴ not for ^mthat we have dominion over your faith, but are helpers of your joy ; (for ⁿby faith ye stand ;) ¹ but I determined this with myself, ^othat I would not come Chap. ii. 1-4. again to you in heaviness. ² For if I make you sorry, who is he then that maketh me glad, but the same which is made sorry by me ? ³ And I wrote this same unto you, lest, when I came, ^pI should have sorrow from them of whom I ought to rejoice ; ^qhaving confidence in you all, that my joy is the joy of you all. ⁴ For out of much affliction and anguish of heart I wrote unto you with many tears ; ^rnot that ye should be grieved, but that ye might know the love which I have more abundantly unto you.

The Apostle here commands them to receive again the excommunicated person, for whom they have grieved, on his sincere repentance, and to show their love to him by a kind and friendly conduct, lest Satan should drive him to despair—St. Paul expects they will obey him in removing the sentence, as they had obeyed him in inflicting it—He declares, that in both instances he acted in the name and authority of Christ.

⁵ BUT "if any have caused grief, he hath not ^bgrieved me, but in part (that I may not overcharge) you all. ⁶ Sufficient to such a man is this ^{*}punishment, which was inflicted ^cof many; ⁷ so ^dthat contrariwise ye ought rather to forgive him, and comfort him, lest perhaps such a one should be swallowed up with overmuch sorrow. ⁸ Wherefore I beseech you that ye would confirm your love toward him; ⁹ (for to this end also did I write, that I might know the proof of you, whether ye be ^eobedient in all things. ¹⁰ To whom ye forgive any thing, I forgive also—for if I forgave any thing, to whom I forgave it, for your sakes forgave I it—[†]in the person of Christ;) ¹¹ lest Satan should get an advantage of us. St. Paul declares, as another reason for not having come to Corinth at the time appointed, his anxiety on account of Titus—He relates his success in Macedonia, and declares the great consequences of his preaching, both to those who receive and reject the Gospel—He ends with a severe reflection on the false teacher, and a profession of his own sincerity and disinterestedness.

¹² FURTHERMORE, "when I came to Troas to preach Christ's Gospel, and ^ba door was opened unto me of the Lord, ¹³ I ^chad no rest in my spirit, because I found not Titus my brother: but taking my leave of them, I went from thence into Macedonia.

¹⁴ Now thanks be unto God, which always causeth us to triumph in Christ, and maketh manifest ^dthe savour of his knowledge by us in every place! ¹⁵ For we are unto God a sweet savour of Christ, ^ein them that are saved, and ^fin them that perish: ¹⁶ to ^gthe one we are the savour of death unto death; and to the other the savour of life unto life. And ^hwho is sufficient for these things! ¹⁷ For we are not as many, ⁱwhich ^{*}corrupt the word of God: but as ^jof sincerity, but as of God, in the sight of God speak we [†]in Christ.

St. Paul here ironically inquires whether it is necessary for him also, as well as the false teacher, to come to them with letters of recommendation—He declares that they themselves are his letters of recommendation, not written with ink, but with the Spirit of the living God; and consequently they were an evidence of God's delegated authority to him in the ministry of the New Testament.

⁴ And such trust have we through Christ to God-ward; ⁵ not ^gthat we are sufficient of ourselves to think any thing as of ourselves; but ^hour sufficiency is of God; ⁶ who also hath made us able ⁱministers of ^jthe New Testament—not ^kof the letter, but of the spirit: for ^lthe letter killeth, but ^mthe spirit ^{*}giveth life.^r

§ 9.—chap. iii. 7, to the end.

St. Paul declares, in opposition to the false teacher, the glorious superiority of the Gospel dispensation—The veil which covered the transient and outward glory of Moses emblematically represented the obscurity and figurative nature of the Covenant of Death: the ministers of the Covenant of the Spirit, by a lasting and greater glory, in the abiding gifts and inspiration of the Holy Spirit, were enabled to unveil, to explain, and to preach every where the more glorious Covenant of Righteousness.

7 BUT if ^athe Ministration of Death, ^bwritten and engraven in stones, was glorious, ^cso that the children of Israel could not steadfastly behold the face of Moses for the glory of his countenance (which glory was to be done away): ⁸how shall not ^dthe Ministration of the Spirit be rather glorious? ⁹for if the Ministration of Condemnation be glory, much more doth the Ministration ^eof Righteousness exceed in glory! ¹⁰For even that which was made glorious had no glory in this respect, by reason of the glory that excelleth. ¹¹For if that which was done away was glorious, much more that which remaineth is glorious!

¹²Seeing then that we have such hope, ^fwe use great ^gplainness of speech: ¹³and not as Moses, ^hwho put a veil over his face, that the children of Israel could not steadfastly look ⁱto the end of that which is abolished. ¹⁴But ^jtheir minds were blinded: for until this day remaineth the same veil untaken away in the reading of the Old Testament: which veil is done away in Christ; ¹⁵but even unto this day, when Moses is read, the veil is upon their heart; ¹⁶nevertheless ^kwhen it shall turn to the Lord, ^lthe veil shall be taken away. ¹⁷Now ^mthe Lord is that Spirit: and where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty. ¹⁸But we all, with open face beholding ⁿas in a glass ^othe glory of the Lord, ^pare changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as [†]by the Spirit of the Lord.^s

§ 10.—chap. iv. 1-6.

St. Paul shows that the glorious ministry entrusted to him fills him with hope and diligence—He desires to commend himself by a full manifestation of the truths of the Gospel, which can only be hid from the worldly-minded, who are blinded by their lusts and passions—St. Paul declares that he seeks not his own glory—God having enlightened his heart, that he might communicate the knowledge and glory of God, which had been made manifest in Jesus Christ.

1 THEREFORE seeing we have ^athis ministry, ^bas we have received mercy, we faint not; ²but have renounced the hidden things of ^cdishonesty, not walking in craftiness, ^dnor handling the word of God deceitfully, but ^eby manifestation of the truth ^fcommending ourselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God.

3 But if our Gospel be hid, ^git is hid to them that are lost: ⁴in whom ^hthe god of this world ⁱhath blinded the minds of them which believe not, lest ^jthe light of the glorious Gospel of Christ, ^kwho is the image of God, should shine unto them. ⁵For ^lwe preach not ourselves, but Christ Jesus the Lord; and ^mourselves your servants for Jesus' sake. ⁶For God, ⁿwho commanded the light to shine out of darkness, [†]hath ^oshined in our hearts, to give ^pthe light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ.

St. Paul declares, by comparing the ministers of the Gospel to earthen vessels, that God chose illiterate and insignificant men for his Apostles to show that the excellency of the power by which his Religion was propagated proceeded from God, and not from men—He enumerates the difficulties to which they were exposed, as a proof that their deliverance from them did not proceed from themselves, but from God.

§ 12.—chap. iv. 12, to the end.

St. Paul shows that through faith in Christ, and the hope of a glorious immortality, he is enabled to overcome all the difficulties and dangers of his Christian ministry—He tells them that for their sakes he endured these sufferings, that they, being convinced of his sincerity, might give thanks to God—He declares his conviction that his sufferings for the sake of the Gospel will procure for him a proportionate reward in heaven; for which cause he looks not for the temporal advantages of this world, but for the eternal glories of the invisible state.

¹² So then ^adeath worketh in us, but life in you. ¹³ We having ^bthe same spirit of faith, according as it is ^cwritten,—

we also believe, and therefore speak; ¹⁴ knowing that ^dHe which raised up the Lord Jesus shall raise up us also by Jesus, and shall present us with you. ¹⁵ For ^eall things are for your sakes, that ^fthe abundant grace might through the thanksgiving of many redound to the glory of God.

St. Paul continues his argument by showing how greatly superior our heavenly habitation will be to that which we at present dwell in—He asserts that God prepares us for this immortal state, and gives us his Spirit as a pledge of it—This consideration gives him boldness in his preaching, and makes him willing to leave this body, that he may be present with the Lord; but whether living or dying, his aim is to be accepted of God, to whom all are accountable.

¹ For we know that if ^aour earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. ² For in this ^bwe groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven.^c ³ If so be that ^dbeing clothed we shall not be found naked. ⁴ For we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened: not for that we would be unclothed, but ^eclothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life. ⁵ Now ^fHe that hath wrought us for the selfsame thing is God, who also ^ghath given unto us the earnest of the Spirit. ⁶ Therefore we are always confident, knowing that, whilst we are at home in the body, we are absent from the Lord; ⁷ (for ^hwe walk by faith, not by sight:) ⁸ we are confident, I say, and ⁱwilling rather to be absent from the body, and to be present with the Lord. ⁹ Wherefore we ^jlabor, that, whether present or absent, we may be accepted of him. ¹⁰ For ^kwe must all appear before the judgment-seat of Christ, ^lthat every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad.

The Apostle, knowing the terrors of the future judgment, was more earnest in his endeavour to preach the Gospel, and to persuade men to be Christians—He discharges his duty, as being manifest to God; and he hoped also to the conviction of the Corinthians—He then defends himself from the attacks of the false teachers, that his converts might be provided with reasons for glorying in him as an apostle; and declares that whether he preached the Gospel at the risk of his life, and was therefore by the faction considered as mad, or whether he acted soberly in shunning persecution, it was for the sake of his disciples.

§ 15.—chap. v. 16, to the end.

From the consideration that Christ died for all mankind, St. Paul proceeds to argue that from henceforth there is no distinction between Jew and Gentile, Christ being no longer esteemed as a Jew according to the flesh—all who are united to Christ by faith become new creatures—Their old and sinful practices have ceased—The advantages and blessings of this new state of being are derived from God alone, who has reconciled the world to himself by Christ Jesus, and has committed the word of reconciliation to the Apostles—St. Paul, in Christ's stead, exhorts all men to come to God, and to accept the pardon which has been purchased for them through the atonement of his Son, who had been made the sin offering for mankind.

m Ps. 118. 18.

¹ WE then, ^aas ^bworkers together with him, ^bbeseech you also ^cthat ye receive not the grace of God in vain; ² (for He saith, ^dI have heard thee in a time accepted, and in the day of salvation have I succoured thee: behold now is the accepted time! behold now is the day of salvation!) ³ giving ^eno offence in any thing, that the ministry be not blamed: ⁴ but in all things ^eapproving ourselves ^fas the ministers of God, in much patience, in afflictions, in necessities, in distresses, ⁵ in ^gstripes, in imprisonments, in tumults, in labors, in watchings, in fastings; ⁶ by pureness, by knowledge, by long-suffering, by kindness, by the Holy Ghost, by love unfeigned, ⁷ by ^hthe word of truth, by ⁱthe power of God, by ^jthe armor of righteousness on the right hand and on the left, ⁸ by honor and dishonor, by evil report and good report: as deceivers—and yet true; ⁹ as unknown—and ^k*yet* well known; ^las dying—and, behold! we live; ^mas chastened—and not killed; ¹⁰ as sorrowful—yet alway rejoicing; as poor—yet making many rich; as having nothing—and yet possessing all things.

§ 17.—chap. vi. 11, to the end, and vii. 1.

St. Paul declares his great love and affection for the Corinthians—Reproves them for their want of love, and exhorts them, as his children, to have their hearts enlarged towards him as their spiritual father—He forbids them either to form marriages with infidels, to contract friendships, or to enter into any kind of familiar intercourse with them—God's promise to those who separate themselves from such unholy alliances should be their strongest motive to aim at perfection.

¹⁴ Be ^dye not unequally yoked together^a with unbelievers: for ^ewhat fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness? ¹⁵ And what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? ¹⁶ And what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? for ^fye are the temple of the living God; as God hath ^gsaid,—

“I will dwell in them, and walk in them;

And I will be their God, and they shall be my people.

⁷ Wherefore ^hcome out from among them,

And be ye separate, saith the Lord,

And touch not the unclean thing;

And I will receive you, ¹⁸ and ⁱwill be a Father unto you,

And ye shall be my sons and daughters,

Saith the Lord Almighty.”

The Apostle entreats the Corinthians to acknowledge him as an apostle, and, by mentioning his own claims to their affection, he insinuates the opposite conduct of the false teacher—He assures them he speaks not this to condemn them, but from the greatest love for them—He rejoices in their good dispositions and obedience.

² RECEIVE us; we have wronged no man, we have corrupted no man, ^awe have defrauded no man. ³ I speak not this to condemn you: for ^bI have said before, that ye are in our hearts to die and live with you. ⁴ Great ^cis my boldness of speech toward you, ^dgreat is my glorying of you: ^eI am filled with comfort, I am exceeding joyful in all our tribulation.

St. Paul, as a proof of his affection, relates to the Corinthians his anxiety on their account, lest they should have been perverted by the false teacher—His joy on the arrival of Titus with the intelligence of their submission and love—He speaks to them of his First Epistle, and assures them that he ordered the incestuous person to be excommunicated, to show his great care of them—He commends their obedience, zeal, and repentance—He expresses the consolation he received from their conduct, and the joy of Titus on seeing their union and obedience.

⁵ FOR ^awhen we were come into Macedonia, our flesh had no rest, but ^bwe were troubled on every side; ^cwithout were fightings—within were fears. ⁶ Nevertheless ^dGod, that comforteth those that are cast down, comforted us by ^ethe coming of Titus; ⁷ and not by his coming only, but by the consolation wherewith he was comforted in you, when he told us your earnest desire, your mourning, your fervent mind toward me; so that I rejoiced the more. ⁸ For though I made you sorry with a letter, I do not repent, ^fthough I did repent; for I perceive that the same epistle hath made you sorry, though it were but for a season. ⁹ Now I rejoice, not that ye were made sorry, but that ye sorrowed to repentance: for ye were made sorry ^gafter a godly manner, that ye might receive damage by us in nothing. ¹⁰ For ^εgodly sorrow worketh repentance to salvation not to be repented of; ^ηbut the sorrow of the world worketh death. ¹¹ For behold this selfsame thing, that ye sorrowed after a godly sort, what carefulness it wrought in you! yea, what clearing of yourselves! yea, what indignation! yea, what fear! yea, what vehement desire! yea, what zeal! yea, what revenge! In all things ye have approved yourselves to be clear in this matter. ¹² Wherefore, though I wrote unto you, I did it not for his cause that had done the wrong, nor for his cause that suffered wrong, ^ιbut that our care for you in the sight of God might appear unto you.

¹³ Therefore we were comforted in your comfort: yea, and exceedingly the more joyed we for the joy of Titus, because his spirit ^ζwas refreshed by you all; ¹⁴ for if I have boasted any thing to him of you, I am not ashamed: but as we spake all things to you in truth, even so our boasting, which I made before Titus, is found a truth; ¹⁵ and his inward affection is more abundant toward you, whilst he remembereth ^κthe obedience of you all, how with fear and trembling ye received him. ¹⁶ I rejoice therefore that ^ιI have confidence in you in all things.

St. Paul exhorts the Corinthians, by the example of the Churches in Macedonia, which were in very straitened circumstances, to contribute liberally to the relief of the Christian brethren in Judæa—He declares he does not give this injunction by commandment, because works of kindness must be voluntary, but hopes they will abound in them from the example and love of Christ—He calls upon them to complete the collections already begun without loss of time, according to their ability, as God regards the willingness of the giver more than the value of the gift—The amount of their liberality to be applied only to the poor brethren in Judæa, who in their turn may be able to supply the wants of the Corinthians.

§ 21.—chap. viii. 16, to the end.

St. Paul thanks God for having made Titus as anxious about them as he was—His diligence induced him to become the bearer of this Epistle—The Apostle informs them that he sends with Titus a brother of great reputation, who had been chosen by the Macedonian Churches, as a witness of the administration of their gifts, that no suspicion of blame might arise as to the disposal of the abundance entrusted to them—Another fellow-laborer is likewise sent, who is more than commonly active on the present occasion, from the report of their good dispositions—He instructs them how to answer the inquiries of the faction, and exhorts them to give to these messengers and to the Churches a proof of their love, and of his confidence in them.

¹⁶ BUT thanks be to God, which put the same earnest care into the heart of Titus for you ! ¹⁷ for indeed he accepted ^athe exhortation ; but being more forward, of his own accord he went unto you. ¹⁸ And we have sent with him ^bthe brother, whose praise is in the Gospel, throughout all the Churches ; ¹⁹ and not that only, but who was also ^cchosen of the Churches to travel with us with this ^{*}grace, which is administered by us ^dto the glory of the same Lord, and declaration of your ready mind : ²⁰ avoiding this, that no man should blame us in this abundance which is administered by us : ²¹ providing ^efor honest things, not only in the sight of the Lord, but also in the sight of men. ²² And we have sent with them our brother, whom we have oftentimes proved diligent in many things, but now much more diligent, upon the great confidence which [†]I have in you. ²³ Whether any do inquire of Titus, he is my partner and fellow-helper concerning you : or our brethren be inquired of, they are ^fthe messengers of the churches—and the glory of Christ. ²⁴ Wherefore show ye to them, and before the Churches, the proof of your love, and of our ^gboasting on your behalf.

St. Paul continues his discourse, by reminding the Corinthians that he had boasted to the Macedonians of their willingness a year ago—Since which time being informed by Titus of their negligence in these things, he sends Titus and his companions to make ready the collections before his arrival, that he might not be ashamed of his boasting in them ; and that what they gave might be done freely, and not, as it were, extorted from them as from persons of covetous dispositions.

St. Paul upbraids the false teacher for judging from outward appearances—He desires also to be acknowledged as the minister of Christ, boasts of the power imparted to him for edification, and again sarcastically refers to the calumniating reports of his opponent, whom he calls upon from the effects of his power, already seen, when absent, in the punishment of the incestuous person, to conclude that when present it would be equally great.

In a continued strain of irony St. Paul declares that he dare not compare himself to the false teacher, who measures himself only by himself, and commends himself for the things he had done at Corinth; but, on the contrary, desires only to rejoice in the bounds prescribed to him by God, in obedience to which he had now reached the Corinthians—He refuses to boast, like the false teacher, in the labors of other men, and hopes to preach the Gospel in those countries where it was never before preached; for not he who glories in the works of others, but he who preaches to the glory of God, and who receives commendation of God, shown by the gifts of the Spirit, is approved.

¹² For ^awe dare not make ourselves of the number, or compare ourselves with some that commend themselves; but they measuring themselves by themselves, and comparing themselves among themselves, ^{*}are not wise. ¹³ But ^bwe will not boast of things without our measure, but according to the measure of the [†]rule which God hath distributed to us, a measure to reach even unto you; ¹⁴ (for we stretch not ourselves beyond our measure, as though we reached not unto you: ^cfor we are come as far as to you also in preaching the Gospel of Christ;) ¹⁵ not boasting of things without our measure, that is, ^dof other men's labors; but having hope, when your faith is increased, that we shall be [†]enlarged by you according to our rule abundantly, ¹⁶ to preach the Gospel in the regions beyond you, and not to boast in another man's ^{*}line of things made ready to our hand. ¹⁷ But ^ehe that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord. ¹⁸ For ^fnot he that commendeth himself is approved, but ^gwhom the Lord commendeth.

St. Paul, having been accused of commending himself, entreats the Corinthians on the present occasion to bear with it; as he fears that those whom he had converted to Christ, whom he was anxious at the judgment to present as a chaste virgin to their espoused husband, were beguiled from him by the false teacher—He urges, that, if their pretended apostle preached to them any other Saviour or Gospel, or conferred on them any other Spirit, they might bear with his pretensions—He affirms, that he is equal to the chief of Christ's apostles; and that, though rude in speech, it was made manifest to them he was not deficient in the knowledge necessary for a minister of the Gospel.

St. Paul explains his reason for not receiving any maintenance from the Corinthians—He declares it did not proceed from unkindness, as his enemies would suggest, but from his love for them, and that he might prevent the false teacher from imputing his exertions to temporal profit—Also, that the false teacher, who received gifts in private, might be compelled to lay aside this practice, and to follow the Apostle's example—Satan himself assuming the appearance of an angel of light, it ought not to excite surprise, that the ministers of Satan should take upon themselves the office of the ministers or apostles of Christ.

St. Paul again entreats the Corinthians to bear with his boasting—As those who are no apostles glory after the flesh, it is necessary for the vindication of his apostolic character, that he also should glory in his circumcision and Jewish extraction—He shows that the Corinthians had submitted too patiently to the overbearing disposition of others—He describes the conduct of the false teacher towards them—He affirms, in opposition to the reproach brought against him of being low born, weak, and ill-qualified to be an apostle, that if any had cause of boasting, he had cause also—He compares himself, in these respects, with the false teacher ; and shows his own superiority by an appeal to his labors and sufferings—his great anxiety for the Churches and individuals, in sympathizing with the weak, and being zealously active in reclaiming the misled—He glories in his weakness, particularly in his deliverance from Damascus, that the power of God might be displayed.

¹⁶ I ^aSAY again, Let no man think me a fool ; if otherwise, yet as a fool ^{*}receive me, that I may boast myself a little. ¹⁷ That which I speak, ^bI speak it not after the Lord, but as it were foolishly, ^cin this confidence of boasting. ¹⁸ Seeing ^dthat many glory after the flesh, I will glory also. ¹⁹ For ye suffer fools gladly, ^eseeing ye yourselves are wise ; ²⁰ for ye suffer, ^fif a man bring you into bondage, if a man devour you, if a man take of you, if a man exalt himself, if a man smite you on the face. ²¹ I speak as concerning reproach, ^gas though we had been weak ; howbeit ^hwhereinsoever any is bold, (I speak foolishly,) I am bold also. ²² Are they Hebrews ? ⁱso am I. Are they Israelites ? so am I. Are they the seed of Abraham ? so am I. ²³ Are they ministers of Christ ? (I speak as a fool) I am more ; ^jin labors more abundant, ^kin stripes above measure, in prisons more frequent, ^lin deaths oft : ²⁴ (of the Jews five times received I ^mforty stripes save one, ²⁵ thrice was I ⁿbeaten with rods, ^oonce was I stoned, thrice I ^psuffered shipwreck, a night and a day I have been in the deep :) ²⁶ in journeyings often, in perils of waters, in perils of robbers, ^qin perils by mine own countrymen, ^rin perils by the heathen, in perils in the city, in perils in the wilderness, in perils in the sea, in perils among false brethren ; ²⁷ in weariness and painfulness, ^sin watchings often, ^tin hunger and thirst, in fastings often, in cold and nakedness. ²⁸ Beside those things that are without, that which cometh upon me daily, ^uthe care of all the Churches ! ²⁹ Who ^vis weak, and I am not weak ? who is offended, and I burn not ? ³⁰ If I must needs glory, ^wI will glory of the things which concern mine infirmities. ³¹ The ^xGod and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, ^ywhich is blessed for evermore, knoweth that I lie not ! ³² In ^zDamascus the governor under Aretas the king kept the city of the Damascenes with a garrison desirous to apprehend me : ³³ and through a window in a basket was I let down by the wall, and escaped his hands.

St. Paul declares, that, if compelled for their sakes to glory, he will do so, in the revelations and visions he had received: but personally he is determined only to glory in his weakness and sufferings; for though he might do so in great truth, he forbears, lest any should form too high an opinion of him.

¹ It is not expedient for me doubtless to glory.* I will come to visions and revelations of the Lord. ² I knew a man ^ain Christ above fourteen years ago (whether in the body, I cannot tell; or whether out of the body, I cannot tell: God knoweth), such an one ^bcaught up to the third heaven. ³ And I knew such a man (whether in the body, or out of the body, I cannot tell: God knoweth), ⁴ how that he was caught up into ^cParadise, and heard unspeakable words, which it is not lawful for a man to utter. ⁵ Of such an one will I glory: ^dyet of myself I will not glory, but in mine infirmities. ⁶ For ^ethough I would desire to glory, I shall not be a fool; for I will say the truth: but now I forbear, lest any man should think of me above that which he seeth me to be, or that he heareth of me.

St. Paul asserts that his bodily infirmity, for which he had been reproached by the faction, was sent to him by God, that he might not be too much exalted by the glorious revelations vouchsafed to him—It is not to be removed, because by his weakness the power of God is made perfect—On this account he rejoices in persecution, infirmities, &c. for in proportion to his weakness, the grace of God dwelling in him gives him strength—The conduct of the Corinthians has compelled him, thus reluctantly, to glory—They ought to have vindicated his apostleship, knowing he was in no respect inferior to the chiefest of the apostles.

St. Paul continues to justify his apostleship by his miracles, and the spiritual gifts he imparted—He inquires of them in what respect he had made them inferior to other Churches, except that he himself was not burdensome to them—He declares his intention of visiting them, and of still not being burdensome; for, as their spiritual father, he seeks not the goods of his spiritual children, but their salvation—He confutes the insinuations of his adversaries, charging him with craftily refusing to take money from them, by appealing to the disinterested conduct of Titus and his assistant—He affirms that his design in sending Titus to them was not as an apology for his not coming himself, (2 Cor. i. 23.), but to give the disobedient time to amend their lives—He expresses his fear, that, when he does visit them, he will be called upon to lament over, and punish those who have not repented of the sins and impurities of which they had been guilty.

¹² TRULY ^athe signs of an apostle were wrought among you in all patience, in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds. ¹³ For ^bwhat is it wherein you were inferior to other Churches, except it be that ^cI myself was not burdensome to you? not to lay up for the parents, but the parents for the children. ¹⁵ And ^sI will very gladly spend and be spent ^hfor ^{*}you; though ⁱthe more abundantly I love you, the less I be loved.

¹⁶ But be it so, ^jI did not burden you: nevertheless, being crafty, I caught you with guile. ¹⁷ Did ^kI make a gain of you by any of them whom I sent unto you? ¹⁸ I ^ldesired Titus, and with him I sent a ^mbrother. Did Titus make a gain of you? walked we not in the same spirit? walked we not in the same steps?

¹⁹ Again, ⁿthink ye that we excuse ourselves unto you? ^oWe speak before God in Christ: ^pbut we do all things, dearly beloved, for your edifying. ²⁰ For I fear, lest, when I come, I shall not find you such as I would, and that ^qI shall be found unto you such as ye would not; lest there be debates, envyings, wraths, strifes, backbitings, whisperings, swellings, tumults; ²¹ and lest, when I come again, my God ^rwill humble me among you, and that I shall bewail many ^swhich have sinned already, and have not repented of the uncleanness and ^tfornication and lasciviousness which they have committed.

St. Paul proceeds by assuring the Corinthians, that when he next visits them they shall be judged after the Law and the Gospel by the testimony of two or three witnesses—He reminds them of his former threat and punishment of the incestuous person, and assures all those who have already sinned, and those who continue in sin, that they likewise will not be spared by him; more particularly as they require a proof of Christ speaking by him, who already has shown himself not in weakness, but in strength, by the mighty works he hath enabled him to accomplish—Christ, though crucified in the weakness of his human nature, still lives by the power of God—We also are weak in body with him, but the Apostle will show that they live with him by the power of God, manifested in their punishment.

¹ THIS is ^athe third time I am coming to ^xyou: ^bin the mouth of two or three witnesses shall every word be established. ² I ^ctold you before, and foretell you (as if I were present the second time, and being absent now), ^{}to them ^dwhich heretofore have sinned, and to all other, that, if I come again, ^eI will not spare: ³since ye seek a proof of Christ ^fspeaking in me, who to you-ward is not weak, but is mighty ^gin you. ⁴ For ^hthough He was crucified through weakness, yet ⁱHe liveth by the power of God. For ^jwe also are weak ^{}in Him, but we shall live with Him by the power of God toward you.

As the faction desired a proof of Christ's being with St. Paul, he now calls upon them to examine themselves, and see whether they possess those spiritual gifts which are the proof of Christ's presence—He hopes, that, although they should be without this proof, he should not be found wanting in supernatural powers, were it necessary for him to use them for their punishment when he came—He prays to God that they might conduct themselves properly, being much more anxious for their repentance, than that he should have an opportunity of exercising his proofs, and of showing his strength—He affirms that supernatural powers can only be exerted in support of the truth—For their perfection, St. Paul writes these things, that, when he is present with them, the miraculous powers imparted to him for the edification of the Church may not be used in severity.

St. Paul, having finished his reproofs to the faction, addresses the whole Church; giving them various directions—He concludes with salutations, and with his apostolic benediction.

¹¹ FINALLY, brethren, farewell, be perfect, be of good comfort, ^abe of one mind, live in peace; and the God of love ^band peace shall be with you! ¹² Greet ^cone another with a holy kiss: ¹³ all the saints salute you. ¹⁴ The ^dgrace of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and ^ethe communion of the Holy Ghost, be with you all! [END OF THE SECOND EPISTLE TO THE CORINTHIANS.]

SECTION XII.—St. Paul returns from Achaia and Corinth to Macedonia, sending his companions forward to Troas.

ACTS XX. latter part of ver. 3, ver. 4, 5.

SECTION XIII.—St. Paul, in his way from Achaia to Macedonia, writes from Corinth his Epistle to the Jews and Gentiles of Rome—to the Gentiles, to prove to them that neither their boasted Philosophy, nor their moral Virtue, nor the Light of human Reason—and to the Jews, that neither their knowledge of, nor obedience to, the Law of Moses—could justify them before God; but that Faith in Christ alone was, and always had been, the only way of Salvation to all Mankind.

THE EPISTLE TO THE ROMANS.

§ 1.—chap. i. 1-7.

St. Paul affirms his apostolic power, and, showing the human nature of Christ by his descent from David, and his Divine nature by the resurrection, he declares that he received his mission from Christ to preach the Gospel to the Gentiles, of whom the Church of Rome principally consisted, and he has therefore authority to address them.

¹ PAUL, a servant of Jesus Christ, ^acalled to be an apostle, ^bseparated unto the Gospel of God, ² which ^che had promised afore ^dby his Prophets in the Holy Scriptures, ³ concerning his Son Jesus Christ our Lord (^ewho was ^fmade of the seed of David according to the flesh; ⁴ and ^gdeclared ^hto be the Son of God with power, according ⁱto the spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead: ⁵ by whom ^jwe have received grace and apostleship, ^kfor ^lobedience to the faith among all nations, ^mfor his Name; ⁿamong whom are ye also the called of Jesus Christ!) ⁷ to all that be in Rome, beloved of God, ^lcalled to be saints! ^mGrace to you and peace from God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ!

§ 2.—chap. i. 8-17.

St. Paul rejoices at their faith—Expresses a great desire to visit them, that he might establish them by the imparting of some spiritual gift; by which proof he and they would be mutually strengthened and comforted in the faith of Christ—Being appointed to preach the Gospel to all nations, he still desires to preach it to the Romans—First, because he affirms it to be the power of God unto salvation to the Jew, and also to the Gentile—Secondly, that in the Gospel alone is revealed the righteousness of God; and the only condition of justification and acceptance with him, which is by faith, and not by works—Thirdly, on account of the superiority of the Gospel dispensation to the Law of Moses, or the light or law of conscience, both of which condemn to death, without any condition, all those who have sinned.

⁸ FIRST, "I thank my God, through Jesus Christ for you all, that ^byour faith is spoken of throughout the whole world. ⁹ For ^cGod is my witness, ^dwhom I serve ^{*}with my spirit in the Gospel of his Son, that ^ewithout ceasing I make mention of you always in my prayers; ¹⁰ making ^frequest, if by any means now at length I might have a prosperous journey (by ^gthe will of God) to come unto you. ¹¹ For I long to see you, that ^hI may impart unto you some spiritual gift, to the end ye may be established; ¹² that is, that I may be comforted together ⁱwith you by ^jthe mutual faith both of you and me. ¹³ Now I would not have you ignorant, brethren, that ^koftentimes I purposed to come unto you, (but ^lwas let hitherto), that I might have some ^mfruit ⁿamong you also, even as among other Gentiles. ¹⁴ I ^oam debtor both to the Greeks, and to the barbarians; both to the wise, and to the unwise: ¹⁵ so, as much as in me is, I am ready to preach the Gospel to you that are at Rome also.

¹⁶ For ^p"I am not ashamed of the Gospel [of Christ]: for ^qit is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; ^rto the Jew first, and also to the Greek. ¹⁷ For ^stherein is the righteousness of God revealed from faith to faith: as it is ^twritten,—

"The just shall live by faith."

§ 3.—chap. i. 18, to the end.

St. Paul shows that the Gentiles had a sufficient evidence of God and of his glorious perfections in the works of creation—To demonstrate that no man by the law of nature could obtain salvation, he enumerates the vices of the Greeks, who had attained to the highest degree of human knowledge and wisdom—He asserts that they knew God, but concealed the knowledge of him, till their own hearts lost sight of the truth, and they established the worship of the creature instead of the Creator—By their knowledge of God they were convinced of the punishment which awaited their crimes; yet they continued in them, and encouraged others to do so likewise.

²⁴ Wherefore ^hGod also gave them up to uncleanness through the lusts of their own hearts, ⁱto dishonor their own bodies ^jbetween themselves; ²⁵ who changed ^kthe truth of God ^linto a lie, and worshipped and served the creature [†]more than the Creator, who is blessed for ever! Amen. ²⁶ For this cause God gave them up unto ^mvile affections; for even their women did change the natural use into that which is against nature: ²⁷ and likewise also the men, leaving the natural use of the woman, burned in their lust one toward another; men with men working that which is unseemly, and receiving in themselves that recompence of their error which was meet. ²⁸ And "even as they did not like to retain God in their knowledge, God gave them over to [†]a reprobate mind, to do those things [°]which are not convenient; ²⁹ being filled with all unrighteousness, fornication, wickedness, covetousness, maliciousness; full of envy, murder, debate, deceit, malignity; whisperers, ³⁰ backbiters, haters of God, despiteful, proud, boasters, inventors of evil things, disobedient to parents, ³¹ without understanding, covenant breakers, [‡]without natural affection, implacable, unmerciful: ³² who [°]knowing the judgment of God, (that they which commit such things [°]are worthy of death), not only do the same, [°]but ^{}have pleasure in them that do them.

The Apostle, well knowing the readiness of the Jews to join in the condemnation of the Gentiles for their sins, now endeavours to convince the Jews of sin, by declaring that they also are guilty of the same crimes, and that God's judgment passed in their Law against such crimes is known to be according to truth; and that all those who commit them, whether Jews or Gentiles, will not escape the final judgment of God.

The Apostle admonishes the Jews that their privileges will tend to their condemnation if they do not repent—He denies all distinctions between Jews and Gentiles in the judgment of God; and affirms that the same punishments, and the same rewards, will be equally given both to the Jew and to the Greek.

St. Paul declares that with God there is no distinction of persons—That all men shall be judged according to the degree of light and knowledge which they have received—That, not those Jews who profess the Law and are not doers of it, but the Gentiles, and all those who act up to it, without having received the later knowledge of it, will find favor with God at the great day, when all men shall be judged by the law of conscience, and of faith, according to the Gospel of God.

¹¹ FOR "there is no respect of persons with God. ¹² For as many as have sinned without law shall also perish without law: and as many have sinned in the Law shall be judged by the Law; ¹³ (for [°]not the hearers of the Law are just before God, but the doers of the Law shall be justified. ¹⁴ For when the Gentiles, which have not the Law, do by nature the things contained in the Law, these, having not the Law, are a law unto themselves: ¹⁵ which show the work of the Law written

St. Paul shows that the mere knowledge of religion could not justify the Jew—The inefficacy of the Mosaic Law for salvation is proved by the flagrant violations of it in the conduct of the Jewish Scribes and Rulers, who were the appointed instructors of the people—He proves the charge by passages from their own Scriptures.

¹⁷ BEHOLD! ^athou art called a Jew, and ^bretest in the Law, ^cand makest thy boast of God, ¹⁸ and ^dknowest his will, ^eand ^{*}approvest the things that are more excellent, being instructed out of the Law; ¹⁹ and ^fart confident that thou thyself art a guide of the blind, a light of them which are in darkness, ²⁰ an instructor of the foolish, a teacher of babes, ^gwhich hast the form of knowledge and of the truth in the Law. ²¹ Thou ^htherefore which teachest another, teachest thou not thyself? thou that preachest a man should not steal, dost thou steal? ²² Thou that sayest a man should not commit adultery, dost thou commit adultery? thou that abhorrest idols, ⁱdost thou commit sacrilege? ²³ Thou that ^jmakest thy boast of the Law, through breaking the Law dishonorest thou God? ²⁴ For the name of God is blasphemed among the Gentiles through you, as it is ^kwritten.

St. Paul proceeds to show that circumcision, in which the Jews gloried, as the sign of their descent from Abraham, and their peculiar privileges of God's chosen people, would profit them nothing unless they kept the Law—By transgressing the Law, the Jew forfeited his privileges, and was in no better condition than the uncircumcised Gentile—The Gentiles, who perform the duties of the Law, will be accepted of God, and admitted into the number of his chosen people—He is not a son of Abraham who makes only an outward profession of religion; but he only is a true son who is spiritually pure.

²⁵ FOR ^acircumcision verily profiteth, if thou keep the Law: but if thou be a breaker of the Law, thy circumcision is made uncircumcision. ²⁶ Therefore ^bif the Uncircumcision keep the righteousness of the Law, shall not his uncircumcision be counted for circumcision? ²⁷ And shall not uncircumcision which is by nature, if it fulfil the Law, ^cjudge thee, who by the letter and circumcision dost transgress the Law? ²⁸ For ^dhe is not a Jew, which is one outwardly; neither is circumcision that which is outward in the flesh: ²⁹ but he is a Jew, ^ewhich is one inwardly; and ^fcircumcision is that of the heart, ^g(in the spirit—and not in the letter;) ^hwhose praise is not of men, but of God.

The Jews and Gentiles having been now equally convinced of sin by the Apostle, he proceeds to refute the prejudices of the Jews, by introducing one who inquires in what then the children of Abraham are favored more than the Gentiles? The Apostle replies—"In having the oracles of God committed to them"—The Jew then inquires, whether, because some of their nation did not believe in these oracles, their unbelief would annul the promises of God? The Apostle, in answer, maintains that the truth and promises of God were confirmed by their unbelief; the frailty of man breaking the conditions on which they rested—The Jew then asks, "If by their unbelief the righteousness of God is more abundantly displayed, would not God be unjust to punish them?"—The Apostle shows that God cannot be unjust; because, if he were, how could he judge the world?—The Jew repeats the argument—The Apostle rejects it, by affirming that such conduct would be inculcating the practice of evil that good might ensue—The just condemnation of those who hold such an opinion.

lieve? ^cshall their unbelief make the faith of God without effect? ^c Num. 23. 19.

 shall we say? Is God unrighteous who taketh vengeance? (I ^hspeak as a man.) ⁶ God forbid! for then ⁱhow shall God judge the world?
⁷ For if the truth of God hath more abounded through my lie unto his glory; why yet am I also judged as a sinner? ⁸ And not rather (as we be slanderously reported, and as some affirm that we say), ^jLet us do evil, that good may come? whose damnation is just.

§ 10.—chap. iii. 9–20.

The Jew now inquires whether they have not better claims than the Gentiles?—To which question the Apostle again affirms what he has already stated, that both Jews and Gentiles were equally under sin—The sin of the Jews proved from their own Scriptures, which they allowed to be of divine inspiration—No man can be justified by the Law either of Moses, or of nature, which could give only the knowledge of sin and its condemnation.

⁹ WHAT then? are we better than they? No, in no wise: for we have before ^{*}proved both Jews and Gentiles, that ^athey are all under sin; ¹⁰ as it is ^bwritten,—

“There is none righteous—no, not one!

¹¹ There is none that understandeth,
 There is none that seeketh after God;

¹² They are all gone out of the way,
 They are together become unprofitable;
 There is none that doeth good—no, not one!

¹³ Their ^cthroat is an open sepulchre;
 With their tongues they have used deceit;
 The ^dpoison of asps is under their lips;

¹⁴ Whose ^emouth is full of cursing and bitterness.

¹⁵ Their ^ffeet are swift to shed blood,

¹⁶ Destruction and misery are in their ways;

¹⁷ And the way of peace have they not known.

¹⁸ There ^gis no fear of God before their eyes.”

¹⁹ Now we know that what things soever ^hthe Law saith, it saith to them who are under the Law: that ⁱevery mouth may be stopped, and ^jall the world may become [†]guilty before God! ²⁰ Therefore ^kby the deeds of the Law there shall no flesh be justified in his sight: for ^lby the Law is the knowledge of sin.

§ 11.—chap. iii. 21–26.

The Law having entirely failed for justification, the Apostle declares that the only method of justification is by faith in Jesus Christ, which is taught in the Law and the Prophets, and offered alike to the Jews and Gentiles, both of whom were equally convinced of sin—And with God there was no respect of persons—Justification the free gift of God to all, through faith, by the propitiation and redemption of Christ Jesus.

²¹ BUT now ^athe righteousness of God without the Law is manifested, ^bbeing witnessed by the Law ^cand the Prophets; ²² even the St. Paul declares that all boasting is excluded, and concludes the argument by declaring that neither the Jew nor the Gentile, under the Gospel, can be justified excepting by faith alone, without any assistance from the works of the Law—The Gentiles as well as the Jews being equally regarded by God—The same means of justification are appointed for both—The Law is established, or made perfect, by faith.

Nay, but by the law of faith; ²⁸ therefore we conclude ^bthat a man is justified by faith without the deeds of the Law. ²⁹ Is he the God of the Jews only? is he not also of the Gentiles? Yes, of the Gentiles also. ³⁰ Seeing ^cit is one God, which shall justify the Circumcision by faith, and Uncircumcision through faith.

The Apostle proves that Abraham was not justified by the works of the Law—He hath not whereof to boast—His justification was of faith, of grace and favor—not of debt, as a reward due to his works—David testifies the same method of justification, from the fact, that Abraham was justified in uncircumcision, and that he afterwards received the sign of circumcision as the seal of his justification by faith, that he might become the spiritual father both of Jew and Gentile, who were to be alike entitled to justification on the equal condition of faith only.

¹ WHAT shall we then say that ^aAbraham, our father as pertaining to the flesh, hath found? ² For if Abraham were ^bjustified by works, he hath whereof to glory; but not before God. ³ For what saith the ^cScripture? “Abraham believed God, and it was counted unto him for righteousness.” ⁴ Now ^dto him that worketh is the reward not reckoned of grace, but of debt; ⁵ but to him that worketh not, but believeth on Him that justifieth ^ethe ungodly, his faith is counted for righteousness. ⁶ Even as David also describeth the blessedness of the man, unto whom God imputeth righteousness without works, ⁷ saying,— f Ps. 32. 1, 2.

“Blessed ^fare they whose iniquities are forgiven,
And whose sins are covered!

⁸ Blessed is the man to whom the LORD will not impute sin!”

⁹ Cometh this blessedness then upon the Circumcision only, or upon the Uncircumcision also? For we say, that faith was reckoned to Abraham for righteousness. ¹⁰ How was it then reckoned? when he was in circumcision, or in uncircumcision? Not in circumcision, but in uncircumcision. ¹¹ And ^ghe received the sign of circumcision, a seal of the righteousness of the faith which he had yet being uncircumcised; that ^hhe might be the father of all them that believe, though they be not circumcised, (that righteousness might be imputed unto them also :) ¹² and the father of circumcision to them who are not of the Circumcision only, but who also walk in the steps of that faith of our father Abraham, which he had being yet uncircumcised.

The Apostle continues his argument, by declaring to the Jews that the promise itself, which was given to Abraham, intimated that all the world should become his heirs through the medium of his faith—But that if only the Jews were to be the heirs to his promise, faith is made void, and the promise which was given on the condition of faith is cancelled—For the Law, without mercy, subjects the sinner to punishment—and without the Law there can be no rule of duty, and consequently no sin—On this account the promise is given to faith—the free grace of God including both the natural and spiritual children of Abraham—Abraham's justification in uncircumcision proves the acceptance of the Gentiles—and the promise itself confirmed to Abraham, as the father of many nations, establishes the claim of the Gentiles to all the blessings of redemption.

¹³ For the promise, that he should be the "heir of [the] world, was not to Abraham, or to his seed, through the Law, but through the righteousness of faith. ¹⁴ For ^bif they which are of the Law be heirs, faith is made void, and the promise made of none effect; ¹⁵ because ^cthe Law worketh wrath: for where no law is, there is no transgression. ¹⁶ Therefore it is of faith, that it might be ^dby grace; ^eto the end the promise might be sure to all the seed; not to that only which is of the Law, but to that also which is of the faith of Abraham, ^fwho is the father of us all, ¹⁷ (as it is ^gwritten, "I have made thee a father of many nations,") ^h*before Him whom he believed, even God, ⁱwho quickeneth the dead, and calleth those ^jthings which be not as though they were.

¹⁸ Who against hope believed in hope, that he might become the father of many nations, (according to that which was ^jspoken, "So shall thy seed be!") ¹⁹ and being not weak in faith, ^khe considered not his own body now dead, when he was about a hundred years old, neither yet the deadness of Sarah's womb: ²⁰ he staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief, but was strong in faith, giving glory to God; ²¹ and being fully persuaded that, what He had promised, ^lHe was able also to perform. ²² And therefore it was imputed to him for righteousness.

The circumstance of Abraham's acceptance with God through faith was recorded for our sakes—to show us that the only means of salvation with God is through faith in his Son, who suffered for our sins, and rose again, as a pledge of our reconciliation, or justification.

²³ Now "it was not written for his sake alone, that it was imputed to him; ²⁴ but for us also, to whom it shall be imputed, if we believe ^bon Him that raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead; ²⁵ who ^cwas delivered for our offences, and ^dwas raised again for our justification.

St. Paul proceeds by enumerating the great blessings and privileges which follow justification by faith—The Holy Spirit imparted to the Gentiles manifests the love of God towards them, which is confirmed by Christ's dying for them while they were still heathens—The Gentiles have then the same hope of salvation through Christ, and the same grounds for rejoicing in God, with the natural seed of Abraham, as they have been reconciled to God by the same Atonement.

¹ THEREFORE "being justified by faith, we have ^bpeace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ, ² (by ^cwhom also we have access by faith into this grace ^dwherein we stand;) and ^erejoice in hope of the glory of God. ³ And not only so, but ^fwe glory in tribulations also, ^gknowing that tribulation worketh patience; ⁴ and ^hpatience, experience; and experience, hope; ⁵ and ⁱhope maketh not ashamed: ^jbecause the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us. ⁶ For when we were yet without strength, ^k*in due time ^lChrist died for the ungodly. ⁷ For scarcely for a righteous man will one die; yet peradventure for a good man some would even dare to die. ⁸ But ⁱGod commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us. ⁹ Much more then, being now justified ^mby his blood, we shall be saved ⁿfrom wrath through him. ¹⁰ For ^oif, when we were enemies, ^pwe were reconciled to God by

St. Paul now lays down the doctrine of Original Sin—He shows that by the transgression of one man sin entered into the world, and the sentence of death was passed upon all men, for that all were afterwards born with a sinful nature—That death reigned, through the corruption of our nature, before the Mosaic Law was known—Adam, the type, the earthly head of the human race, communicated sin—Christ, the antitype, the spiritual head, communicated life and justification to all—The effects of Christ's obedience are greater than the effects of Adam's disobedience—By one offence Adam brought into the world transgression and death—By obedience Christ undid the evil of sin, and through the righteousness of faith restored to all mankind the free gift of life and pardon for man's offence, for both original and actual sin—The Law entered to give the knowledge of the guilt of sin—The grace and gift of God abounds, to deliver us from the condemnation of the Law—As sin has universally reigned, subjecting all mankind to spiritual and temporal death, so shall also the grace of God reign, producing holiness unto eternal life.

¹² WHEREFORE, as ^aby one man sin entered into the world, and ^bdeath by sin; and so death passed upon all men, ^{*}for that all have sinned. ¹³For until the Law sin was in the world: but ^csin is not imputed when there is no law; ¹⁴nevertheless death reigned from Adam to Moses, even over them that had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's^z transgression, ^dwho is the figure of Him that was to come.

¹⁵But not as the offence, so also is the free gift; for if through the offence of one many be dead, much more the grace of God, and the gift by grace, which is by one man, Jesus Christ, hath abounded ^eunto many. ¹⁶And not as it was by one that sinned, so is the gift: for the judgment was by one to condemnation, but the free gift is of many offences unto justification. ¹⁷For if [†]by one man's offence death reigned by one; much more they which receive abundance of grace and of the gift of righteousness shall reign in life by one, Jesus Christ. ¹⁸Therefore as [†]by the offence of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation; even so ^{*}by the righteousness of one the free gift came ^fupon all men unto justification of life. ¹⁹For as by one man's disobedience many were made sinners, so by the obedience of One shall many be made righteous. ²⁰Moreover ^gthe Law entered, that the offence might abound. But where sin abounded, grace did much ^hmore abound; ²¹that as sin hath reigned unto death, even so might grace reign through righteousness unto eternal life by Jesus Christ our Lord.

St. Paul, after having shown that by the one offence of Adam all men were condemned to death, inquires whether it were possible to preach, as they had been accused of doing (chap. iii. 8.), "that by the continuance of sin, the free grace of God to eternal life would be more abundantly given to man"—To confute this prevailing error, he affirms the obligation of Christian holiness from the rite of baptism, by which Christians were instructed, that, as Christ was crucified, and gave up his body as a sacrifice to sin, so those who are baptized unto him should consider their bodies as dead and buried with him unto sin, and as raised with him to newness of life, by the same quickening Spirit who raised the dead body of Christ from the grave—The old man, or the natural man, being put to death with Christ, the power of sin is destroyed, and man is delivered from its dominion—Those who are dead unto sin with Christ, will live with him unto God for ever—Which things the Romans are exhorted to consider.

¹ WHAT shall we say then? "shall we continue in sin, that grace may abound? ²God forbid! How shall we, that are ^bdead to sin, live any longer therein? ³Know ye not, that ^cso many of us as ^{*}were baptized into Jesus Christ ^dwere baptized into his death? ⁴Therefore we are ^eburied with him by baptism into death: that ^flike as Christ was raised up from the dead by ^gthe glory of the Father, ^heven so we also should walk in newness of life. ⁱFor ^jif we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection; ^kknowing this, that ^lour old man is crucified with him, that ^mthe body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin. ⁿFor ^ohe that is dead is ^pfreed from sin. ^qNow ^rif we be dead with Christ, we believe that we shall also live with him; ^sknowing that ^tChrist being raised from the dead dieth no more—death hath no more dominion over him. ^uFor in that he died, ^vhe died unto sin once: but in that he liveth, ^whe liveth unto God. ^xLikewise reckon ye also yourselves to be ^ydead indeed unto sin, but ^zalive unto God through Jesus Christ [our Lord].

St. Paul exhorts the Romans, as they are now by the death of Christ redeemed from the dominion of sin, not to suffer sin again to reign over their mortal bodies, but to subdue them—He calls upon them to resist the tempting power of sin, and to surrender their souls and bodies to the service of righteousness unto God; for they are no longer under the Law, which exacts a sinless obedience without mercy, but they are admitted into the dispensation of the Gospel, which gives pardon and grace.

¹²LET ^anot sin therefore reign in your mortal body, that ye should obey ^bit in the lusts thereof; ¹³neither yield ye your ^cmembers as ^d*instruments of unrighteousness unto sin; but ^eyield yourselves unto God, as those that are alive from the dead, and your members as instruments of righteousness unto God. ¹⁴For ^fsin shall not have dominion over you; for ye are not under the Law, but under Grace.

The Apostle then inquires whether it was rational to suppose, as some did, that sin might abound, because the Jews were delivered from the Law (which exacted a perfect obedience, without any condition of pardon), and were admitted into the Dispensation of Mercy—He affirms, on the contrary, that under every dispensation, those who continue in sin are the servants of sin, and become subject to eternal death—Those only who are obedient to the faith of the Gospel receive the reward of righteousness, the free gift of eternal life—He rejoices that the Romans, who had been the slaves of sin, had now obeyed the form or mould of doctrine imparted to them in baptism, by which they were emancipated from its slavery, and were become the servants of righteousness.

¹⁵WHAT then? shall we sin, ^abecause we are not under the Law, but under Grace? God forbid! ¹⁶Know ye not, that ^bto whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey; whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness? ¹⁷But God be thanked, that ye were the servants of sin, but ye ^chave obeyed from the heart ^dthat form of doctrine ^e*which was delivered you! ¹⁸Being then ^fmade free from sin, ye became the servants of righteousness.

The Apostle, in reasoning with the Romans, employs allusions to their own customs (the laws of slavery being familiar to them), that they might better comprehend the tyranny that sin had exercised over their bodies—He exhorts them, as they are now made free from sin, as they were before free from righteousness, to yield their members, which had formerly been employed in the service of sin, whose end was death, to the service of righteousness, whose end is eternal life.

¹⁹(I SPEAK after the manner of men because of the infirmity of your flesh.) § 22.—chap. vii. 1-6.

The Apostle, still further to convince the Jews of the inefficacy of the Law to justification, affirms that the Law of Moses, like the law of marriage, was dissolved by the death of either party—That as they have been put to death by the Law in the body of Christ, they were at liberty to be married to another husband, even to Him, who, though put to death, was raised again from the dead, that with him they might live unto God—He asserts, that, before they were dead with Christ in the Flesh, their evil propensities, which were made manifest by the Law, subjected them to death—But they were now delivered from the power of the Law, having given up, with Christ, the fleshly body of sin, which held them bound under its curse, that they might serve God in the spiritual obedience of the Gospel, and not in the old ceremonies and letter of the Law.

The Apostle here supposes a Jew to inquire, whether the Law was the cause of sin? to which he replies, that it could not be the cause of sin, because it prohibited sin—The evil propensity was in man, and the Law served only to discover it—St. Paul, to avoid giving offence, describes in his own person the state of the unregenerate Jew under the Law—He shows that the Law disclosed what was evil, and prohibited it—by which he sinful nature of man was strongly excited to disobedience and rebellion against its prohibitions—Wherefore the Law and the Commandment, as they prohibit sin, are holy, just, and good—But still, as the Apostle has implied, they lead to condemnation, and not to salvation.

For ^dwithout the Law sin was dead. ⁹ For I was alive without the Law once: but when the Commandment came, sin revived, and I died. ¹⁰ And the Commandment, ^ewhich was ordained to life, I found to be unto death. ¹¹ For sin, taking occasion by the Commandment, deceived me, and by it slew me. ¹² Wherefore ^fthe Law is holy, and the Commandment holy, and just, and good.

The Jew is now supposed to inquire, whether the Law, which is so good and holy, is the cause of their death? to which the Apostle replies, that it is not the Law, but sin, which is the cause of death; and the exceeding enormity of sin is manifested, when it subjected sinners to death by a Law, which was holy, just, and good—He affirms that the Law itself promotes spirituality; but to show its inefficacy, for want of supernatural assistance, for sanctification, he represents, still in his own person, that the unregenerate Jew, under the Law, was sold under sin, that is, without the power of escaping from its service; and describes the two contending principles of the nature of man, which are always opposed to each other—Under the Law the carnal nature prevails over the inward man, or the spiritual nature—The Mosaic Law gives man the knowledge of his duty, without the power of performing it, and he is brought into subjection to the law of sin and death—In this miserable condition the Apostle exclaims, “Who then can deliver me from this body, which is sold, or is the property of sin?”—He joyfully declares the only means of salvation to be the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ.

¹³ WAS then that which is good made death unto me? God forbid! But sin, that it might appear sin, working death in me by that which is good; that sin by the Commandment might become exceeding sinful. ¹⁴ For we know that the Law is spiritual; but I am carnal, ^a sold under sin. ¹⁵ For that which I do I ^{*}allow not; for ^bwhat I would, that do I not; but what I hate, that do I. ¹⁶ If then I do that which I would not, I consent unto the Law that it is good. ¹⁷ Now then it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me. ¹⁸ For I know that in me (that is, in my Flesh,) dwelleth no good thing; for to will is present with me, but how to perform that which is good I find not. ¹⁹ For the good that I would I do not; but the evil which I would not, that I do. ²⁰ Now if I do that I would not, it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me. ²¹ I find then a law, that, when I would do good, evil is present with me. ²² For I ^cdelight in the Law of God after ^cthe inward man; ²³ but I see another law in ^emy members, warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of sin which is in my members. ²⁴ O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from [†]the body of this death? ²⁵ I ^hthank God, through Jesus Christ, our Lord!

The Apostle declares that, although, while he remained under the Mosaic Law, with his mind he desired to serve the Law of God, but, through the corrupt nature of his flesh, he served the law of sin—There is now no condemnation, in the New Covenant, to those who believe in Christ, and walk under the influence of his Spirit—He proceeds to show the method by which man is delivered from the law of sin and of death—The Law not having the power either to pardon or to justify, through the degraded nature and corruption of the flesh, the Son of God, in the likeness of man, put sin to death in that body which had been made subject to death by the sin of the first man, by which the righteousness of the Law was fulfilled, and mankind were ransomed from its curse and power—The sacrifice of Christ enjoins on all conformity to the spirituality of the Law, destroying or making a sacrifice of sin in the flesh, if they would be sanctified, and made partakers of the Spirit of Christ.

²⁵ So then with the mind I myself serve the Law of God; but with the Flesh the law of sin. ¹ There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, [who ^awalk not after the Flesh, but after the Spirit]. ² For ^bthe law of ^cthe Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from ^dthe law of sin and death. ³ For ^ewhat the Law could not do, in that it was weak through the Flesh, ^fGod sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful Flesh, and ^{*}for sin, condemned sin in the Flesh; ⁴ that the righteousness of the Law might be fulfilled in us, ^gwho walk not after the Flesh, but after the Spirit.

The Apostle continues his argument by affirming, that as the Spirit of God is now promised to them in the Gospel, they are no longer obliged to live after the Flesh, which leads to eternal death; but if, through the Spirit, they mortify the deeds of the Body, they shall attain eternal life—They are now delivered from the power and bondage of the Mosaic Law, and through Grace are become the adopted children of God, and are enabled to address him as a reconciled Father, the Holy Spirit bearing witness with their spirit, that they are the sons of God; and if sons, then heirs, and joint-heirs with Christ of glory and immortality, if they jointly suffer with him.

The Apostle, having now fully illustrated the blessings of the Gospel dispensation, which promises to the Jew and Gentile, through faith, both justification, sanctification, and a joint inheritance of glory and immortality with Christ, introduces the painful subject of persecutions for the Gospel's sake—He addresses himself more particularly to the Gentiles, as being the most exposed to them; and comforts them with the consideration that the transient sufferings of this life cannot be compared with the glory which shall be revealed to them hereafter; a manifestation of glory which all mankind, even the heathens themselves, have earnestly desired and anticipated—For as mankind have been all subjected to mortality, not by their own act, but by reason of the transgression of their first parents, they have hope that they shall all be delivered from the bondage of corruption and the grave, and be admitted into the glorious happiness of the children of God—He further assures them they are not the only sufferers, for the whole creation travaileth in pain together, under the weight of Adam's transgression, hoping for deliverance; and the Apostles themselves are groaning under the miseries of life till their sonship shall be established in the redemption of their bodies.

St. Paul continues his argument, by affirming that man's salvation in this world, is the hope of the future deliverance which is given in the Gospel; for what we possess is no longer hoped for—If therefore they have a firm hope in a glorious resurrection, they should be able calmly to endure the afflictions of life, waiting patiently its future blessings—Another ground of consolation is, that the Holy Spirit will assist them in their distresses, and guide them in their prayers; making, himself, intercession for their deliverance in desires and groanings, not expressed, but comprehended and accepted by God.

²⁴ FOR we are saved by hope. But ^ahope that is seen is not hope; for what a man seeth, why doth he yet hope for? ²⁵ But if we hope for that we see not, then do we with patience wait for it. ²⁶ Likewise the Spirit also helpeth our infirmities; for ^bwe know not what we should pray for as we ought, but ^cthe Spirit itself maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered. ²⁷ And ^dHe that searcheth the hearts knoweth what is the mind of the Spirit, ^ebecause He maketh intercession for the saints ^faccording to the will of God. ²⁸ And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them ^gwho are the called according to his purpose.

§ 30.—chap. viii. 29, to the end.

As a further encouragement to the persecuted Gentile converts, St. Paul affirms that all things, more particularly sufferings, work together for more abundant good to those who love God, to those who are called according to his merciful purpose—For those whom he thus foreknew, he also did predestinate, or decree, to be conformed to the image of his Son (which they now were by suffering), that they might become his chosen people—That the Gentiles, who were thus preordained, were called to the knowledge of the Gospel unto salvation, and those who obeyed were justified, and those who persevered were glorified—God having thus manifested his mercy towards them, and given his own Son to suffer for them, the Gentiles are exhorted not to sink under their afflictions, but rather to rejoice in them, as a pledge of their conformity to the image of Christ—“Which of their persecutors,” St. Paul demands, “will be able at the last day to bring an accusation against those whom God has justified; and who will dare to condemn those for whom Christ had died, and intercedes?”—He asserts, too, that neither injuries, nor afflictions, nor the troubles and dangers of this life, will be able to separate the chosen people of God from the love of Christ, through whom they have hitherto more than conquered.

²⁹ FOR whom ^aHe did foreknow, ^bHe also did predestinate ^cto be conformed to the image of his Son, ^dthat he might be the first-born among many brethren. ³⁰ Moreover whom He did predestinate, them He also ^ecalled: and whom He called, them He also ^fjustified: and whom He justified, them He also ^gglorified. ³¹ What shall we then say to these things? ^hIf God be for us, who can be against us? ³² He ⁱthat spared not his ^jown Son, but ^kdelivered him up for us all, how shall He not with him also freely give us all things? ³³ Who shall lay any thing to the charge of God's elect? ^l*It is* God that justifieth? ³⁴ Who ^mis he that condemneth? It is Christ that died? yea rather, that is risen again? ⁿwho is even at the right hand of God? ^owho also maketh intercession for us? ³⁵ Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? ³⁶ (as it is ^pwritten, “For thy sake we are killed all the day long; we are accounted as sheep for the slaughter.”) ³⁷ Nay, ^qin all these things we are more than conquerors, through him that loved us. ³⁸ For I am persuaded, that neither Death, nor

§ 31.—chap. ix. 1-5.

The Apostle, having now shown the full claim of the Gentiles to the privileges and blessings of the Gospel, cautiously introduces the subject of the rejection of the Jews—This truth he assures them, as in the presence of Christ, the Holy Spirit bearing him witness, fills him with so much grief and anguish, that, to prevent it, he would willingly be cut off himself from the visible Church of God, or submit to the temporal destruction that awaited them for their disobedience, if by that means he could save his kinsmen according to the flesh—To conciliate them, and to engage their attention, he enumerates their glorious privileges.

¹ I ^asay the truth in Christ, I lie not, (my conscience also bearing me witness in the Holy Ghost,) ² that ^bI have great heaviness and continual sorrow in my heart. ³ For ^cI could wish that myself were ^{*}accursed from Christ for my brethren, my kinsmen according to the flesh; ⁴ who ^dare Israelites; ^eto whom pertaineth the adoption, and ^fthe glory, and ^gthe covenants, and ^hthe giving of the Law, and ⁱthe service of God, and ^jthe promises; ⁵ whose ^kare the fathers; and ^lof whom as concerning the flesh Christ came, ^mwho is over all God, blessed forever! Amen.

The objection that had been already proposed (chap. iii. 3.), that the rejection of the Jews would be contrary to the veracity of God, the Apostle here again introduces, and fully answers—He affirms, that although the Jews are rejected, the promise of God would not fail—He assures them that all the children of Abraham, according to the flesh, as in the case of Ishmael, were not Abraham's seed; for in Isaac was his seed to be called—The word of the promise itself demonstrates that Abraham's seed according to the promise, not according to the flesh, are to be his spiritual children.

By the instance of Esau and Jacob, the Apostle proves that God's fidelity is not impeached by the rejection of the Jews, as He has a sovereign right to elect, or call, according to his own good pleasure—The children, who were the representatives of nations, being yet unborn, could neither merit God's preference, nor deserve to be left out of his covenant—Such distinctions, therefore, evidently depend on God's free choice, and illustrate the purpose of God according to election.

¹⁰ AND not only this; but when ^aRebecca also had conceived by one—even by our father Isaac. ¹¹ For the children being not yet born, neither having done any good or evil, (that the purpose of God according to election might stand, not of works, but of ^bHim that call-eth;) ¹² it was ^csaid unto her, “The ^{*}elder shall serve the [†]younger:” ¹³ as it is ^dwritten, “Jacob have I loved, but Esau have I hated.”

The Apostle continues his argument by affirming, that the free election of God, as it regards nations, is perfectly consistent with his justice, as He has a sovereign right to dispense his free-will blessings and mercies as He pleases; which is illustrated in the instance of the Israelites of old, whose transgressions, as a nation, God, of his own free mercy, pardoned after they had worshipped the golden calf; (Exod. xxxiii. 19.) as He declared unto Moses—For man can never merit, or claim as a right, the mercy of God

—The Israelites, after their apostacy, might, had it been God's pleasure, continued as a nation, as the Egyptians were, for the purpose of demonstrating, in their destruction and punishment, the Almighty power of God, and his hatred of sin—The Apostle then intimates the rejection of the Jews, by asserting that the same free gift of mercy is still exercised, and the same exemplary punishment will be inflicted on those who continue and harden themselves in sin, resisting, as the Egyptians did, the evidences that were vouchsafed to them.

¹⁴ WHAT shall we say then? "Is there unrighteousness with God? God forbid!" ¹⁵ For He saith to ^bMoses, "I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy, and I will have compassion on whom I will have compassion." ¹⁶ So then it is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that showeth mercy. ¹⁷ For 'the Scripture saith unto Pharaoh, "Even for this same purpose have I raised thee up, that I might show my power in thee, and that my Name might be declared throughout all the earth." ¹⁸ Therefore hath He mercy on whom He will have mercy; and whom He will, He hardeneth.

§ 35.—chap. ix. 19–29.

The Apostle here introduces a Jew, as saying, "If God acts thus, why does he then find fault? for who can resist his will, if he is determined to destroy nations?"—"Nay," answers the Apostle, "but who art thou that presumest to argue against the decrees of God?"—He vindicates the justice of God's dealings towards the Jews and Gentiles, and shows his absolute power over nations, exalting one and rejecting another, by a reference to Jeremiah's type of the potter—He then applies the type more immediately to the present condition of the Jews and Gentiles—The Jews, like the Egyptians, after continued proofs of God's forbearance, became vessels of wrath fitted for destruction, making known the power of God unto salvation—The believing Gentiles were prepared by their means for the glory of being admitted into the visible Church of God, and with the believing Jews were called to be God's people, and the vessels of his mercy—The same truths were predicted and enforced by their own ancient prophets.

¹⁹ THOU wilt say then unto me, Why doth He yet find fault? for ^awho hath resisted his will? ²⁰ Nay, but, O man! who art thou that ^{*}replieth against God? ^bShall the thing formed say to Him that formed it, Why hast Thou made me thus? ²¹ Hath not the 'potter power over the clay, of the same lump to make ^done vessel unto honor, and another unto dishonor? ²² What if God, willing to show his wrath, and to make his power known, endured with much long-suffering 'the vessels of wrath fitted 'to destruction? ²³ and that He might make known ^ethe riches of his glory on the vessels of mercy, which He had ^hafore prepared unto glory. . . . ²⁴ even us, whom He hath called, ⁱnot of the Jews only, but also of the Gentiles? ²⁵ As he saith also in ^jOsee,—

The Apostle, having clearly represented the rejection of the Jews, and reconciled it with the Divine truth and justice, introduces a Jew, inquiring, "Whether the Gentiles, who have not followed after the rule of righteousness given in the Mosaic Law, have now attained to the righteousness of faith, and to the privileges of God's chosen people, while the Jews, who have followed the righteousness of the Law, have not attained to righteousness by faith in the Gospel?"—The Apostle declares that the cause of their rejection was their want of faith, and their dependence on the works of the Law, which led them to look for justification from its observances, as had been predicted by one of their own prophets—The Apostle repeats his anxious desire that the Jews would believe and be saved—He confesses their zeal for the glory of the Law, but it was without the knowledge of the object and end of its rites—Their ignorance of the plan of God's salvation through faith made them endeavour to establish their own method of justification, through the sacrifices and ceremonies of the Law, and prevented them from submitting to the righteousness of faith, which God requires as the only means of salvation.

In order to convince the Jews of their error, with regard to justification by their Law, St. Paul describes the nature of the righteousness which is required by the Law, and that which is required by the Gospel—He affirms that Christ himself was the end or the perfection of the Law—the great object of all its rites and sacrifices—Moses has declared that by the Law none can be justified, because it was not possible for man to live up to its precepts—But the Law or principle of faith, as described by Moses (Dent. xxx. 11-14.), requires not those signs from heaven, which the Jews demanded, that Christ should descend again from heaven, and rise again from the dead, for the word was always nigh them, and power was given them to fulfil it—Thus it was with the Gospel, it requires a confession of our faith in Jesus Christ, and an inward conviction of the truth of his resurrection, producing righteousness of life—The Scripture has declared that none shall be ashamed or disappointed of their confidence, that the plan of redemption extends to all, both Jew and Gentile; for all who believe in Christ and call upon him shall be saved.

⁴ For ^aChrist is the end of the Law for righteousness to every one that believeth. ⁵ For Moses ^bdescribeth the righteousness which is of the Law, “That the man which doeth those things shall live by them.” ⁶ But the righteousness which is of faith speaketh on this ^cwise, “Say not in thine heart, Who shall ascend into heaven?” (that is, to bring Christ down from above;) ⁷ or, Who shall descend into the deep? (that is, to bring up Christ again from the dead.) ⁸ But what ^dsaith it? The word is nigh thee, even in thy mouth, and in thy heart: that is, the word of faith, which we preach: ⁹ that ^eif thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved. ¹⁰ (For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation.) ¹¹ For the Scripture ^fsaith, “Whosoever believeth on Him shall not be ashamed.” ¹² For ^gthere is no difference between the Jew and the Greek: for ^hthe same Lord over all ⁱis rich unto all that call upon Him. ¹³ For ^jwhosoever shall call ^kupon the Name of the Lord shall be saved.

From the prophecies of the New Testament, which were now fulfilling, St. Paul is led to vindicate his divine mission, and that of the other Apostles—He inquires how it was possible that these prophecies, which foretold the acceptance of the Gentiles, should be accomplished? for without the Gospel could be no salvation, and without preachers it could not have been proclaimed—As a Jew, he asserts that his prejudices would have prevented him from carrying the Gospel to the Gentiles, unless he had been divinely appointed to do so; and he shows, according to the prophecy of Isaiah, their great success, and the happy reception which attended the messengers of salvation.

¹⁴ How then shall they call on Him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in Him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear ^awithout a preacher? ¹⁵ and how shall they preach, except they be sent? as it is ^bwritten,—

“How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the Gospel of peace,
And bring glad tidings of good things!”

§ 39.—chap. x. 16, to the end.

Here the Jew is supposed to object, that a divine commission would have been attended with full success; whereas many did not obey the faith of the Gospel—To which St. Paul replies, that the Spirit of God had already foretold the event in the case of the Jews themselves—He asserts that Faith is produced by the means of preaching and hearing—by the command of God himself—and asks if they have not all heard the glad tidings of salvation?—The Apostles have preached the Gospel to the Jew as well as the Gentile, fulfilling the words of the Psalmist, which he applied to the universal teaching of the heavenly bodies—“But,” says the Apostle, “let me further ask if Israel did not know that the Gospel should be preached to the Gentiles?” their Prophets having so plainly predicted the calling of the Gentiles, and their joyful reception of the Gospel, as well as the rejection of the Jews.

¹⁶ But ^athey have not all obeyed the Gospel. For Esaias ^bsaith,—

“Lord, who hath believed ^{*}our report?”

¹⁷ So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God.

¹⁸ But I say, Have they not heard? Yes, verily,—

“Their ^csound went into all the earth,

And ^dtheir words unto the ends of the world.”

¹⁹ But I say, Did not Israel know? First Moses ^esaith, “I will provoke you to jealousy by them that are no people, and by ^fa foolish nation I will anger you.” ²⁰ But Esaias is very bold, and ^gsaith,—

“I was found of them that sought me not;

I was made manifest unto them that asked not after me.”

²¹ But to Israel he ^hsaith,—

“All day long I have stretched forth my hands Unto a disobedient and gainsaying people.”

§ 40.—chap. xi. 1-6.

St. Paul, after having thus positively declared the rejection of the Jews as a nation, comforts them with the assurance that God has not totally cast away his chosen people—For, as in the days of Elias, there shall still remain a remnant of converted Jews, who, with the believing Gentiles, are elected through faith to be God’s people, not by good works, but by the mere grace and favor of God.

The Apostle continues by asserting, that, though Israel, as a nation, had failed to obtain that justification and righteousness which they sought for in the works of the Law, the election of the chosen remnant who hath embraced the Gospel had obtained it, and the rest were blinded—had their eyes shut against the truth, fulfilling the prediction of Isaiah ; also that of David likewise, who foretold the lamentable condition to which they were now reduced by the persevering hardness of heart, which converted their best blessings into curses, and snares, and the means of their punishment, by leading them to expect a worldly Messiah—He predicted also that their unbelief would bring them into a state of abject slavery and depression.

“ God hath given them the spirit of [†]slumber, “ Let their table be made a snare, and a trap,

 And a stumblingblock, and a recompence, unto them ;
¹⁰ Let ^etheir eyes be darkened, that they may not see,
 And bow down their back alway.”

§ 42.—chap. xi. 11–16.

To the question whether the Jews have so stumbled that they are irrecoverably fallen ? St. Paul replies, “ by no means : ” but by their rejection of Christ the calling in of the Gentiles was accelerated, and the very circumstance of receiving the Gentiles into covenant with God was intended for the good of the Jews, to excite in them an emulation of becoming partakers of the blessings of the Gospel—He predicts their final restoration, and argues, that if through their unbelief the riches of God’s grace is manifested to the Gentile world, how much more will his grace and glory be magnified by their return ! He glories in the ministry entrusted to him to preach among the Gentiles, in the hope that by his means the Jews may be provoked to emulate the Gentiles, and the Gentiles be induced to respect the Jews—“ For,” he repeats, “ if their fall was the occasion of the reconciliation of the heathen world to God, the resumption of the Jewish nation will still more be the means of establishing the truth of Christianity, and will cause as much joy in the world, as if they had been raised from the dead—For if a remnant of the Jews, the firstfruits who have believed, have been accepted of God, the whole Jewish nation will be so when they also believe—And if Abraham, the root of that nation, was accounted righteous through faith, so will his branches be on the same conditions.”

St. Paul exhorts the Gentiles not to contemn or despise the Jews because they are at present cut off from being God’s people ; from the consideration that they themselves, as a wild olive-tree, are grafted in among them, and are made partakers with them of the root and fatness of the good olive-tree, deriving all their spiritual advantages and privileges from their root—that is, from the Abrahamic covenant—They are admonished not to exult in the preference which is now given to them—for the Jews fell for unbelief, and they stand by faith—therefore they should not be arrogant, but fear—For if God spared not the natural branches, it cannot be expected that he will spare them—They are commanded to remember the severity of God toward the Jews who fell, and his great mercy toward them, if they continue in his faith; otherwise they also shall be cut off—And the Jews if they abide not in unbelief, shall be grafted in again—shall be restored to their forfeited privileges, which God in his mercy is still able to do—For if the Gentiles, like a wild and fruitless scion, were grafted, contrary to the nature of things, into a good stock—were brought to the knowledge of God, and admitted into covenant with him—how much more possible is it that the natural branches, who have already received the Law and the Prophets, will be brought to the knowledge of salvation, and be grafted again into their own olive-tree!

¹⁷ AND if ^asome of the branches be broken off, ^band thou, being a wild olive-tree, wert grafted in ^{*}among them, and with them partakest of the root and the fatness of the olive-tree; ¹⁸boast ^cnot against the branches; but if thou boast, thou bearest not the root, but the root thee. ¹⁹Thou wilt say then, The branches were broken off, that I might be grafted in. ²⁰Well; because of unbelief they were broken off, and thou standest by faith. ^dBe not high-minded, but ^efear; ²¹for if God spared not the natural branches, take heed lest he also spare not thee. ²²Behold therefore the goodness and severity of God! on them which fell, severity; but toward thee, goodness, ^fif thou continue in his goodness: otherwise ^gthou also shalt be cut off. ²³And they also, ^hif they abide not in unbelief, shall be grafted in: for God is able to graft them in again. ²⁴For if thou wert cut out of the olive-tree which is wild by nature, and wert grafted contrary to nature into a good olive-tree; how much more shall these, which be the natural branches, be grafted into their own olive-tree!

St. Paul affirms that he would not have the Gentiles ignorant of the mystery of the future restoration of the Jews, lest they should think too highly of their own merits—He affirms that blindness in part only has happened unto Israel, till the Church of the Gentiles is fully completed, and then the Jews themselves will be brought to the knowledge of salvation, according to the predictions of their own prophets—And God, when he remits their sins, will take them into covenant again, and restore them to their forfeited privileges, (compare v. 27, Is. lix. 20, 21.)—The unbelieving Jews, being the enemies of the Gospel, were rejected of God in favor of the Gentiles—But, as it regards election, whereby they were originally chosen of God to be his peculiar people, they are beloved for their fathers' sakes—God's free gift, and the calling of Abraham's posterity, is not to be changed; for as surely as the Gentiles had now obtained mercy through the disbelief of the Jews, so surely will the Jews who have not believed have the same mercy extended to them—For God has concluded both Jew and Gentile in unbelief; both of them being in turns disobedient to the light they possessed, that the free gift or pardon might be equally bestowed on all.

²⁵ FOR I would not, brethren, that ye should be ignorant of this mystery, (lest ye should be ^awise in your own conceits,) that ^{*}blindness ^bin part is happened to Israel, ^cuntil the fulness of the Gentiles be come in; ²⁶and so all Israel shall be saved: as it is ^dwritten,— § 45.—chap. xi. 33, to the end.

The Apostle concludes the whole of this important discussion with rapturous expressions of wonder and praise at the wisdom and goodness of God in his dealings with man—He asserts that it is not possible for man to penetrate into the secret judgments and councils of God, that the election of either the Jews or the Gentiles is perfectly consistent with his justice, as no man can have a claim upon Him, who is the Author and efficient Cause of all things—By whom and through whom they all exist—Let God therefore in all his works be glorified for ever.

³³ O THE depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! ^a how unsearchable are his judgments, and ^b his ways past finding out! ³⁴ For ^c who hath known the mind of the Lord? or ^d who hath been his counsellor? ³⁵ or ^e who hath first given to him, and it shall be recompensed unto him again? ³⁶ For ^f of him, and through him, and to him, are all things: ^g to ^{*} whom be glory for ever! Amen.

St. Paul, having concluded the doctrinal part of his Epistle, enforces the necessity of a holy life, which these doctrines were intended to inculcate—He calls upon the Romans to present, instead of the animals that were offered to God in the Mosaic Law, their own bodies at his spiritual altar, a living sacrifice; entirely consecrating them to God, which is the acceptable and reasonable service of a Christian—He exhorts them not to be conformed to the customs and sentiments of this world, but to be changed in the temper and dispositions of their minds—that they might fulfil in themselves, and prove to others, what is the perfect and acceptable will of God—St. Paul, by his apostolical office, warns them not to think too highly of themselves on account of their spiritual endowments—for although their qualifications may differ, they are the members of one body, indispensably necessary to each other—He admonishes them to use the respective gifts entrusted to them diligently and faithfully.

¹ I ^a BESEECH you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, ^b that ye present your bodies ^c a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service; ² and ^d be not conformed to this world, but ^e be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may ^f prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God. ³ For I say, ^g through the grace given unto me, to every man that is among you, ^h not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think; but to think ^{*} soberly, according as God hath dealt ⁱ to every man the measure of faith. ⁴ For ^j as we have many members in one body, and all members have not the same office; ⁵ so ^k we, being many, are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another. ⁶ Having ^l then gifts differing ^m according to the grace that is given to us, whether ⁿ prophecy, let us prophesy according to the proportion of faith; ⁷ or ministry, let us wait on our ministering; or ^o he that teacheth, on teaching; ⁸ or ^p he that exhorteth, on exhortation. ^q He that [†]giveth, let him do it [†]with simplicity; ^r he that ruleth, with diligence; he that showeth mercy, ^s with cheerfulness.

St. Paul continues his practical exhortations, by recommending them to love one another; to practise benevolence to all—to have humility, diligence, devotion, mutual sympathy, and to seek no revenge, but to overcome evil with good,—with other important moral duties.

The Jews, as the chosen people of God, refused to obey, or to pay tribute to magistrates who were not of their own nation, and, as they supposed, especially appointed by God—The Apostle charges them to submit to all civil authorities; as all power, both Jewish and heathen, is ordained and established by God—The condemnation of those who resist the divine appointments—The advantages of a just administration—Rulers, as the ministers of God, have the power of protecting and rewarding the good, and, as the servants of God, to punish those who commit evil—Submission is therefore necessary, not only from fear of temporal punishment, but for conscience' sake—They are also commanded to pay tribute; as all civil magistrates are to be considered as ministers of God's providence, devoting themselves to the duties of their office.—They are required to render to all the honor due to their office and rank, although individually they do not deserve it—To be just in the discharge of all their debts, so that they may owe no man any thing, but to love one another, which is the fulfilment and perfection of all the commands of the Law that respect our neighbours.

⁸ Owe no man any thing, but to love one another; for ⁱhe that loveth another hath fulfilled the Law. ⁹ For this, "Thou ^jshalt not commit adultery, Thou shalt not kill, Thou shalt not steal, [Thou shalt not bear false witness,] Thou shalt not covet;" and if there be any other commandment, it is briefly comprehended in this saying, namely, "Thou ^kshalt love thy neighbour as thyself." ¹⁰ Love worketh no ill to his neighbour: therefore ^llove is the fulfilling of the Law.

As the Roman converts must have well known that this was the time of the Gospel dispensation, the light having begun to shine, the Apostle calls upon them to awake from their sleep of sin, as the eternal salvation of the Gospel, and the duties it requires, are better understood by them than when they first believed—He represents the darkness of the heathen world under the figure of a night which is far spent, and the Gospel as the light of a glorious day succeeding to it—He exhorts the Gentiles, therefore, to cast off the dresses in which the works of darkness were performed, and to clothe themselves with the armor or habiliments of light—to renounce all their former habits and § 50.—chap. xiv. 1–12.

The Jewish converts at Rome supposing that the distinction between meats, which Moses had commanded, as well as the Holy Days he had appointed, should be observed in the Christian dispensation, St. Paul calls upon the Gentiles, who were better informed, to receive with kindness the Jewish converts who were thus weak in the faith, and not to dispute these points—The Jews and Gentiles are exhorted not to despise or condemn each other—for God has received into his Church the Gentile, who indiscriminately eats of all things; and at the day of judgment will hold up or acquit all those who have acted in these indifferent matters according to their conscience—Men are not to live to themselves, but to Christ—They are not to condemn each other, for we shall all be judged of God, to whom alone we are accountable.

4. 5.

1 HIM that ^ais weak in the faith receive ye, but ^bnot to doubtful disputations. 2 For one believeth that he ^cmay eat all things: another, who is weak, eateth herbs. 3 Let not him that eateth despise him that eateth not; and ^dlet not him which eateth not judge him that eateth: for God hath received him. 4 Who ^edart thou that judgest another man's servant? to his own master he standeth or falleth: yea, he shall be holden up; for God is able to make him stand. 5 One ^fman esteemeth one day above another; another esteemeth every day alike: let every man be ^gfully persuaded in his own mind. 6 He ^hthat ⁱregardeth the day, regardeth it unto the Lord; and he that regardeth not the day, to the Lord he doth not regard it. He that eateth, eateth to the Lord, for ^jhe giveth God thanks; and he that eateth not, to the Lord he eateth not, and giveth God thanks. 7 For ^knone of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself. 8 For whether we live, we live unto the Lord; and whether we die, we die unto the Lord: whether we live therefore, or die, we are the Lord's. 9 For ^lto this end Christ both died, and rose, and revived, that he might be ^mLord both of the dead and living. 10 But why dost thou judge thy brother? or why dost thou set at nought thy brother? For ⁿwe shall all stand before the judgment-seat of Christ. 11 For it is ^owritten,—

“As I live, saith the Lord,
Every knee shall bow to Me,
And every tongue shall confess to God.”

12 So then ^pevery one of us shall give account of himself to God.

§ 51.—chap. xiv. 13, to the end.

From the consideration that we shall all render an account of our own actions, St. Paul entreats the Roman converts to forbear judging each other, and to be particularly cautious that they do not give occasion to a weak brother to stumble, or to offend; for although no meat is unclean of itself, it is made so to him who thinks it unclean—They are to take care, therefore, that by their example they destroy not him for whom Christ died, and that the good liberty they enjoyed be not the cause of evil—For the kingdom of God does not consist in meat and drink, but in holiness, spiritual peace, and joy—They are to serve Christ by following such a course as will promote the peace and edification of each other, and not by the indulgence of appetite run the risk of destroying the virtue of another—Those who have attained to a right faith concerning meats and days are not to make a display of it to the injury of others—He indeed is happy who never subjects himself to condemnation by doing those things, which in themselves are lawful—He who believes certain meats, according to the Mosaic Law, to be unlawful, sins if he eats them; because he does a thing which he believes to be unlawful, and thereby violates his conscience.

¹³ LET us not therefore judge one another any more: but judge this rather, that ^ano man put a stumblingblock or an occasion to fall in his brother's way. ¹⁴ I know, and am persuaded by the Lord Jesus, ^bthat there is nothing ^cunclean of itself; but ^dto him that esteemeth any thing to be ^eunclean, to him it is unclean. ¹⁵ But if thy brother be grieved with thy meat, now walkest thou not ^fcharitably. ^gDestroy not him with thy meat, for whom Christ died.

¹⁶ Let ^hnot then your good be evil spoken of. ¹⁷ For ⁱthe kingdom of God is not meat and drink; but righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost. ¹⁸ For he that in these things serveth Christ ^jis acceptable to God, and approved of men. ¹⁹ Let ^kus therefore follow after the things which make for peace, and things wherewith ^lone may edify another. ²⁰ For ^mmeat destroy not the work of God. ⁿAll things indeed are pure; ^obut it is evil for that man who eateth with offence. ²¹ It is good neither to eat ^pflesh, nor to drink wine, nor any thing whereby thy brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak. ²² Hast thou faith? have it to thyself before God. ²³ Happy is he that condemneth not himself in that thing which he alloweth! ²⁴ And he that ^qdoubteth is damned if he eat, because he eateth not of faith: for ^rwhatsoever is not of faith is sin.

Those who are strong in the faith are more particularly required to bear with the infirmities of the weak, and to attend not to their own gratification, but to the edification of their neighbour, as Christ himself, by his own predicted example, has taught (Ps. lix. 9).—He assures them, that all that is recorded of the sufferings of Christ, and of the saints in the Old Testament, were written for their instruction, that they through the Scriptures might obtain the same hope and the same consolation—He prays that they may act toward each other after the example of Christ, that they may without contention unite in glorifying God, and receive and hold communion with each other in the same manner as Christ received them both into his Church, to the glory of God the Father.

The Apostle here seems to have in view a probable objection that the Jew would make to the admission of the Gentiles into the Church of Christ, because Christ had not preached to them—St. Paul affirms, that Jesus Christ was born a Jew, and became the minister of circumcision for the purpose of more effectually accomplishing the promises made to the fathers, by which means the Gentiles also would have reason to glorify God for his mercy, according to the predictions of their own prophets, which clearly prove that God was determined from the beginning to make the Gentiles his people, as well as the Jews—The Apostle prays that God, who has given the Gentiles this hope, may fill them with all spiritual peace and joy in believing in Jesus Christ; and that all their hopes and expectations in him may be fulfilled by the power of the Holy Ghost.

⁸ Now I say that ^aJesus Christ was a minister of the Circumcision for the truth of God, ^bto confirm the promises made unto the fathers:

§ 54.—chap. xv. 14, to the end.

The Apostle, having now completed the doctrinal and practical part of his Epistle, addresses himself more particularly to the Gentiles—He is persuaded that they are so full of goodness and knowledge of God’s design towards them, that they are able to admonish each other ; yet he has made bold to write to them on account of his apostolical office, which he had received from God, for the converting of the Gentiles, whom he now presents as an acceptable offering to God—He glories in the success of his own ministry—Christ working with him, and, by the power of the Holy Ghost, confirming both his doctrine and mission, by mighty signs and wonders—His anxiety to preach the Gospel where it was before unknown prevented him from having visited Rome, where it was already planted ; but now having nothing more to do, he hopes to see them on his way to Spain, and to be gratified by their company thitherward—He mentions his intended journey to Jerusalem, to carry the contributions of his Gentile converts to the Jewish converts at Jerusalem, thereby hoping to reconcile them to each other ; as through the means of the Jews the Gentiles were brought to the knowledge of spiritual things, they are bound to make a return of carnal things—He repeats his intention to visit them, after he has delivered up the contributions, endued with the gifts and blessings of the Gospel of Christ—He entreats them to pray earnestly for his deliverance from the unbelieving Jews, who sought to destroy him ; and that his subscription might be acceptable to the Christian Jews—His hope to see them, that they may be both strengthened by the imparting of spiritual gifts, and his benediction.

^a 2 Pet. 1. 12. ¹⁴ AND ^aI myself also am persuaded of you, my brethren, that ye also are full of goodness, ^bfilled with all knowledge, able also to admonish one another. ¹⁵ Nevertheless, brethren, I have written the more boldly unto you in some sort, as putting you in mind, ^cbecause of the grace that is given to me of God, ¹⁶that ^dI should be the minister of Jesus Christ to the Gentiles, ministering the Gospel of God, that ^ethe ^{*}offering up of the Gentiles might be acceptable, being sanctified by the Holy Ghost. ¹⁷ I have therefore whereof I may glory through Jesus Christ ^fin those things which pertain to God ; ¹⁸for I will not dare to speak of any of those things ^gwhich Christ hath not wrought by me, ^hto make the Gentiles obedient, by word and deed, ¹⁹through ⁱmighty signs and wonders, by the power of the Spirit of God ; so that from Jerusalem, and round about unto Illyricum, I have fully preached the Gospel of Christ : ²⁰yea, so have I strived to preach the Gospel, not where Christ was named, ^jlest I should build upon another man’s foundation : ²¹but, as it is ^kwritten,—

“ To whom He was not spoken of, they shall see :
And they that have not heard shall understand.”

³⁰ Now I beseech you, brethren, for the Lord Jesus Christ's sake, and ^tfor the love of the Spirit, ^uthat ye strive together with me in your prayers to God for me; ³¹ that ^vI may be delivered from them that ^wdo not believe in Judæa; and that ^xmy service which I have for Jerusalem may be accepted of the saints; ³² that ^yI may come unto you with joy, (^zby the will of God,) and may with you be ^arefreshed. ³³ Now ^bthe God of peace be with you all! [Amen.]

§ 55.—chap. xvi. 1-16.

St. Paul recommends to the good offices of the Christians at Rome, Phebe, who was the bearer of this Epistle—He greets Aquila and Priscilla, whom he highly commends, and the Church at their house—He salutes many of his Christian friends, some of whom were probably his own converts, who were now settled at Rome.

³ Greet ^ePriscilla and Aquila my helpers in Christ Jesus. ⁴ (who have for my life laid down their own necks: unto whom not only I give thanks, but also all the churches of the Gentiles). ⁵ likewise greet ^dthe church that is in their house. Salute my well-beloved Epenetus, who is ^fthe firstfruits of Achaia unto Christ. ⁶ Greet Mary, who bestowed much labor on us. ⁷ Salute Andronicus and Junias, my kinsmen, and my fellow-prisoners, who are of note among the apostles, who also ^gwere in Christ before me. ⁸ Greet Amplias my beloved in the Lord. ⁹ Salute Urbané, our helper in Christ, and Stachys my beloved. ¹⁰ Salute Apelles approved in Christ. Salute them which are of Aristobulus' ^hhousehold. ¹¹ Salute Herodion my kinsman. Greet them that be of the †household of Narcissus, which are in the Lord. ¹² Salute Tryphena and Tryphosa, who labor in the Lord. Salute the beloved Persis, which labored much in the Lord. ¹³ Salute Rufus ⁱchosen in the Lord, and his mother and mine. ¹⁴ Salute Asyncritus, Phlegon, Hermas, Patrobas, Hermes, and the brethren which are with them. ¹⁵ Salute Philologus, and Julias, Nereüs, and his sister, and Olympas, and all the saints which are with them. ¹⁶ Salute ^jone another with a holy kiss. The Churches of Christ salute you!

St. Paul again admonishes them to avoid divisions, and the persons that cause them; for they serve not Christ by preaching his doctrine, being only anxious for worldly gain; and, not having spiritual gifts, they by good words and fair speeches deceive or pervert the hearts of the unsuspecting Christian converts—He rejoices in their present obedience, and exhorts them to continue to discern and to practise that which is good, and to be pure or simple respecting evil; that is, avoiding all false doctrines, or examples—He foretells the speedy destruction of the agents of Satan, who introduce divisions in the Church, and concludes with his benediction.

The Apostle, in a postscript, sends the salutations of several persons who were with him—He sums up all, by ascribing glory to God, who alone has power to establish in the true faith of Christ, without the Law of Moses; which before was a mystery, kept secret (although the calling of the Gentiles was predicted), but is now made manifest by the commandment revealed to St. Paul by the everlasting God, that all nations by his preaching might have the knowledge of the obedience of faith, that they might believe and obey—To God, who is only wise, to him be glory for ever!

Amen.

²⁵ Now ^hto him that is of power to stablish you ⁱaccording to my Gospel, and the preaching of Jesus Christ, ^jaccording to the revelation of the mystery, ^kwhich was kept secret since the world began, ²⁶ but ^lnow is made manifest, and by the Scriptures of the Prophets, according to the commandment of the Everlasting God, made known to all nations for ^mthe obedience of faith: ²⁷ to ⁿGod only wise, be glory, through Jesus Christ for ever! Amen.

¹⁷ And from Miletus he sent to Ephesus, and called the elders of the Church.^c ¹⁸ And when they were come to him, he said unto them, “Ye know, ^dfrom the first day that I came into Asia, after what manner I have been with you at all seasons, ^e19 serving the Lord with all humility of mind, and with many tears, and temptations, which befell me ^fby the lying in wait of the Jews; ^g20 and how ^hI kept back nothing that was profitable ⁱunto you, but have showed you, and have taught you publicly, and from house to house, ^j21 testifying ^kboth to the Jews, and also to the Greeks, repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ. ^l22 And now, behold! ^mI go (bound in the Spirit) unto Jerusalem, not knowing the things that shall befall me there; ⁿ23 save that ^othe Holy Ghost witnesseth in every city, saying that bonds and afflictions ^pabide me. ^q24 But ^rnone of these things move me, neither count I my life dear ^sunto myself, ^tso that I might finish my course with joy, ^uand the ministry, ^vwhich I have received of the Lord Jesus, to testify the Gospel of the grace of God. ^w25 And, now, behold! ^xI know that ye all, among whom I have gone preaching the kingdom of God, shall see my face no more. ^y26 Wherefore I take you to record this day, that I am ^zpure from the blood of all men; ^a27 for ^bI have not shunned to declare unto you all ^cthe counsel of God.

ACTS xxi. 37, to the end, and xxii. 1–21.

³⁷ AND as Paul was to be led into the castle, he said unto the chief captain, "May I speak unto thee?" Who said, "Canst thou speak Greek?" ³⁸ Art ^anot thou that Egyptian, which before these days madest an uproar, and leddest out into the wilderness four thousand men that were murderers?" ³⁹ But Paul said, "I ^bam a man which am a Jew of Tarsus, a city in Cilicia, a citizen of no mean city: and, I beseech thee, suffer me to speak unto the people."

¹⁷ "And ^ait came to pass, that, when I was come again to Jerusalem, even while I prayed in the temple, I was in a trance; ¹⁸ and ^bsaw Him saying unto me, 'Make ^chaste, and get thee quickly out of Jerusalem; for they will not receive thy testimony concerning me.' ¹⁹ And I said, 'Lord! "they know that I imprisoned and beat in every synagogue them that believed on Thee; ²⁰ and when the blood of thy martyr Stephen was shed, I also was standing by, and consenting [unto his death], and kept the raiment of them that slew him.' ²¹ And He said unto me, 'Depart, ^hfor I will send thee far hence unto the Gentiles.' " ²⁶ When the centurion heard that, he went and told the chief captain, saying, "Take heed what thou doest; for this man is a Roman." ²⁷ Then the chief captain came, and said unto him, "Tell me, art thou a Roman? ³⁰ ON the morrow, because he would have known the certainty wherefore he was accused of the Jews, he loosed him [from his bands], and commanded the Chief Priests and all their Council to appear, and brought Paul down, and set him before them. ¹ And Paul, earnestly beholding the Council, said, "Men and brethren, ^aI have lived in all good conscience before God until this day." ² And the high priest, Ananias, commanded them that stood by him, ^bto smite him on the mouth. ³ Then said Paul unto him, "God shall smite thee, thou whited wall! for sittest thou to judge me after the Law, and ^ccommandest me to be smitten contrary to the Law? " ⁴ And they that stood by said, "Revilest thou God's high priest? " ⁵ Then said Paul, "I ^dwist not, brethren, that he was the high priest; ^efor it is ^fwritten, 'Thou shalt not speak evil of the ruler of thy people.' "

⁶ But when Paul perceived that the one part were Sadducees, and the other Pharisees, he cried out in the Council, "Men and brethren! ^gI am a Pharisee, the son of a Pharisee; ^hof the hope and resurrection of the dead I am called in question! " ⁷ And when he had so said, there arose a dissension between the Pharisees and the Sadducees; and the multitude was divided. ⁸ For ⁱthe Sadducees say that there is no resurrection, neither angel, nor spirit; but the Pharisees confess both.

¹² AND when it was day, "certain of the Jews banded together, and bound themselves ^{*}under a curse, saying, that they would neither eat nor drink till they had killed Paul.ⁱ ¹³ And they were more than forty which had made this conspiracy ; ¹⁴ and they came to the Chief Priests and elders, and said, " We have bound ourselves under a great curse, that we will eat nothing until we have slain Paul. ¹⁵ Now therefore ye, with the Council, signify to the chief captain that he bring him down unto you [to-morrow], as though ye would inquire something more perfectly concerning him : and we, or ever he come near, are ready to kill him."

¹⁶ And when Paul's sister's son heard of their lying in wait, he went and entered into the castle, and told Paul. ¹⁷ Then Paul called one of the centurions unto him, and said, " Bring this young man unto the chief captain ; for he hath a certain thing to tell him." ¹⁸ So he took him, and brought him to the chief captain, and said, " Paul the prisoner called me unto him, and prayed me to bring this young man unto thee, who hath something to say unto thee." ¹⁹ Then the chief captain took him by the hand, and went with him aside privately, and asked him, " What is that thou hast to tell me ?" ²⁰ And he said, " The ^b Jews have agreed to desire thee that thou wouldst bring down Paul to-morrow into the Council, as though they would inquire somewhat of him more perfectly. ²¹ But do not thou yield unto them ; for there lie in wait for him of them more than forty men, which have bound themselves with an oath, that they will neither eat nor drink till they have killed him ; and now are they ready, looking for a promise from thee." ²² So the chief captain then let the young man depart, and charged him, " See thou tell no man that thou hast showed these things to me."

“ Forasmuch as I know that thou hast been of many years a judge unto this nation, I do the more cheerfully answer for myself ; ¹¹ because that thou mayest understand, that there are yet but twelve days since I went up to Jerusalem ^h for to worship. ¹² And ⁱ they neither found me in the temple disputing with any man, neither raising up the people, neither in the synagogues, nor in the city ; ¹³ neither can they prove the things whereof they now accuse me. ¹⁴ But this I confess unto thee, that after ^j the way which they call heresy, so worship I the ^k God of my fathers, believing all things which are written in ^l the Law and in the Prophets ; ¹⁵ and ^m have hope toward God (which they themselves also allow), ⁿ that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust. ¹⁶ And ^o herein do I exercise myself, to have always a conscience void of offence toward God, and toward men. ¹⁷ Now after many years ^p I came to bring alms to my nation, and offerings ; ¹⁸ whereupon ^q certain Jews from Asia found me purified in the tem-

⁶ And when he had tarried among them ^{*}more than ten days, he went down unto Cæsarea; and the next day sitting on the judgment-seat commanded Paul to be brought. ⁷ And when he was come, the Jews which came down from Jerusalem stood round about, ^dand laid many and grievous complaints against Paul, which they could not prove: ⁸ while he answered for himself, "Neither ^eagainst the Law of the Jews, neither against the temple, nor yet against Cæsar, have I offended any thing at all." ⁹ But Festus, ^fwilling to do the Jews a pleasure, answered Paul, and said, "Wilt ^gthou go up to Jerusalem, and there be judged of these things before me?" ¹⁰ Then said Paul, 'I stand at Cæsar's judgment-seat, where I ought to be judged. To the Jews have I done no wrong, as thou very well knowest. ¹¹ For ^hif I be an offender, or have committed any thing worthy of death, I refuse not to die; but if there be none of these things whereof these accuse me, no man may deliver me unto them. ⁱI appealⁿ unto Cæsar!' ¹² Then Festus, when he had conferred with the Council, from the beginning, (if they would testify,) that after 'the most straitest sect of our religion I lived a Pharisee. ⁶ And 'now I stand and am judged for the hope of ^ethe promise made of God unto our fathers; ⁷ unto which promise ^hour twelve tribes, instantly serving 'God *day and night, ^jhope to come; for which hope's sake, King Agrippa! I am accused of the Jews. ⁸ Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you, that God should raise the dead?

ACTS xxv. 13-22.

⁹ "I ^kverily thought with myself, that I ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth. ¹⁰ Which 'thing I also did in Jerusalem; and many of the saints did I shut up in prison, having received authority ^mfrom the Chief Priests; and when they were put to death, I gave my voice against them; ¹¹ and "I punished them oft in every synagogue, and compelled them to blaspheme; and being exceedingly mad against them, I persecuted them even unto strange cities. ¹² Whereupon 'as I went to Damascus with authority and commission from the Chief Priests, ¹³ at mid-day, O king! I saw in the way a light from heaven, above the brightness of the sun, shining round about me and them which journeyed with me. ¹⁴ And when we were all fallen to the earth, I heard a Voice speaking unto me, and saying in the Hebrew tongue, 'Saul! Saul! why persecutest thou me? it is hard for thee to kick against the pricks.' ¹⁵ And I said, 'Who art thou, Lord?' And he said, 'I am Jesus whom thou persecutest. ¹⁶ But rise, and stand upon thy feet; for I have appeared unto thee for this purpose, ⁿto make thee a minister and a witness, both of these things which thou hast seen, and of those things in the which I will appear unto thee; ¹⁷ delivering thee from the people, and from the Gentiles, ^ounto whom now I send thee, ¹⁸ to 'open their eyes, and ^sto turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, 'that they may receive forgiveness of sins, and "inheritance among them which are "sanctified by faith that is in me.'

¹⁹ "Whereupon, O King Agrippa! I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision; ²⁰ but ^wshowed first unto them of Damascus, and at Jerusalem, and throughout all the coasts of Judæa, and then to the Gentiles, that they should repent, and turn to God, and do ^xworks meet for repentance. ²¹ For these causes ^ythe Jews caught me in the temple, and went about to kill me. ²² Having therefore obtained help of God, I continue unto this day, witnessing both to small and great, saying none other things than those ^zwhich the Prophets and "Moses did say should come; ²³ that ^bChrist should suffer, and 'that he should be the first that should rise from the dead, and ^dshould show light unto the people, and to the Gentiles."

²⁵ But he said, "I am not mad, most noble Festus! but speak forth the words of truth and soberness. ²⁶ For the king knoweth of these things, before whom also I speak freely; for I am persuaded that none of these things are hidden from him; for this thing was not done in a corner. ²⁷ King Agrippa, believest thou the Prophets? I know that thou believest." ²⁸ Then Agrippa said unto Paul, "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian." ²⁹ And Paul said, "I 'would to God, that not only thou, but also all that hear me this day, were both almost, and altogether such as I am, except these bonds."

³⁰ And when he had thus spoken, the King rose up, and the Governor, and Bernicé, and they that sat with them; ³¹ and when they were gone aside, they talked between themselves, saying, "This ^eman doeth nothing worthy of death or of bonds." ³² Then said Agrippa unto Festus, "This man might have been set at liberty, ^hif he had not appealed unto Cæsar."

Acts xxviii. 1–10.

³ And when Paul had gathered a bundle of sticks, and laid them on the fire, there came a viper out of the heat, and fastened on his hand.

⁵ And he shook off the beast into the fire, and ^dfelt no harm ; ⁶ howbeit they looked when he should have swollen, or fallen down dead suddenly. But after they had looked a great while, and saw no harm come to him, they changed their minds, and ^esaid that he was a god.

⁷ In the same quarters were possessions of the chief man of the island, whose name was Publius ; who received us, and lodged us three days courteously. ⁸ And it came to pass, that the father of Publius lay sick of a fever and of a ^fbloody flux ; to whom Paul entered in, and ^gprayed, and ^hlaid his hands on him, and healed him. ⁹ So when this was done, others also, which had diseases in the island, came, and were healed ; ¹⁰ who also honored us with many ⁱhonors, and when we departed, they laded us with such things as were necessary.

¹⁴ AND so we went toward Rome. ¹⁵ And from thence, when the brethren heard of us, they came to meet us as far as Appii Forum, and The Three Taverns ; whom when Paul saw, he thanked God, and took courage. ¹⁶ And when we came to Rome, the centurion delivered the prisoners to the captain of the guard ; but ^aPaul was suffered to dwell by himself with a soldier that kept him.^m

¹⁷ AND it came to pass, that after three days Paul called the chief of the Jews together. And when they were come together, he said unto them, “Men and brethren,” though I have committed nothing against the people, or customs of our fathers, yet ^bwas I delivered prisoner from Jerusalem into the hands of the Romans; ¹⁸ who, ^cwhen they had examined me, would have let me go, because there was no cause of death in me. ¹⁹ But when the Jews spake against it, ^d“I was constrained to appeal unto Cæsar; not that I had ought to accuse my nation of. ²⁰ For this cause therefore have I called for you, to see you, and to speak with you; because that for the ^eHope of Israel I am bound with ^fthis chain.” ²¹ And they said unto him, “We neither received letters out of Judæa concerning thee, neither any of the brethren that came showed or spake any harm of thee. ²² But we desire to hear of thee what thou thinkest; for as concerning this Sect, we know that every where ^git is spoken against.”

²³ And when they had appointed him a day, there came many to him into his lodging; ^hto whom he expounded and testified the kingdom of God, persuading them concerning Jesus ⁱboth out of the Law of Moses, and out of the Prophets, from morning till evening. ²⁴ And ^jsome believed the things which were spoken, and some believed not. ²⁵ And when they agreed not among themselves, they departed, after that Paul had spoken one word, “Well spake the Holy Ghost by ^kEsaias the prophet unto our fathers, ²⁶ saying,—

‘Go unto this people, and say,

Hearing ye shall hear, and shall not understand;

And seeing ye shall see, and not perceive.

²⁷ For the heart of this people is waxed gross,

And their ears are dull of hearing,

And their eyes have they closed;

Lest they should see with their eyes,

And hear with their ears,

And understand with their heart,

And should be converted, and I should heal them.’

²⁸ Be it known therefore unto you, that the Salvation of God is sent ^lunto the Gentiles, and that they will hear it.” ²⁹ And when he had said these words, the Jews departed, and had great reasoning among themselves.

SECTION X.—St. Paul writes his Epistle to the Ephesians,ⁿ to establish them in the Christian Faith, by describing, in the most animating Language, the Mercy of God displayed in the Calling of the Gentiles through Faith in Christ, without being subjected to the Law of Moses, and to enforce upon them that Holiness and Consistency of Conduct, which is required of all who have received the knowledge of Salvation.

THE EPISTLE TO THE EPHESIANS.

§ 1.—chap. i. 1–14.

After his individual and general salutation, St. Paul breaks forth into rapturous expressions of gratitude to God for the spiritual blessings he has bestowed on the Gentiles; and for calling them according to his merciful design, that they might be holy and blameless, his chosen people—Predestinated to the adoption of children, through faith in Jesus Christ—By his blood they are redeemed, and their sins pardoned—not by the Mosaic Law, but through his abundant mercy—giving the apostles both wisdom in spiritual things, and prudence in the exercise of them, and revealing to them the mystery of his will (the admission of the Gentiles into his Church, without subjecting them to the Jewish Law,) and the plan by which both Jews and Gentiles will be gathered together under Jesus Christ into one Church—Through Christ the believing Jews have obtained the spiritual inheritance promised to the spiritual children of Abraham, being predestinated or relected according to the purpose of his own will, through faith in Christ; that they, who were the first who believed in Christ, should be to the praise of his glory, by imparting the knowledge of salvation to the world—In him the Gentiles also have believed, when they heard from the apostles the word of truth—and by him the Holy Spirit, promised by the Father, was given, which is the earnest of the eternal inheritance of the Jews, and now of the Gentiles, till they together obtain the purchased possession of heaven, to the praise and glory of Christ.

³ Blessed ^ebe the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly ^fplaces in Christ; ⁴according as ^gHe hath chosen us in him ^hbefore the foundation of the world, that we should ⁱbe holy and without blame before Him; in love ^jhaving ^kpredestinated us unto ^lthe adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself, ^maccording to the good pleasure of his will, ⁿto the praise of the glory of his grace, ^owherein He hath made us accepted in ^pThe Beloved: ^qin ^rwhom we have redemption through his blood (the forgiveness of sins), according to ^sthe riches of his grace, ^twherein He hath abounded toward us in all wisdom and prudence, ^uhaving ^vmade known unto us the mystery of his will, according to his good pleasure ^wwhich He hath purposed in himself: ^xthat in the dispensation of ^ythe fulness of times ^zHe might gather together in one ^aall things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth—even in him. ¹¹ In ^bwhom also we have obtained an inheritance, ^cbeing predestinated according to ^dthe purpose of Him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will, ^ethat ^fwe, who first ^gtrusted in Christ, should ^hbe to the praise of his glory; ¹³ in whom ye also ⁱtrusted, (after that ye heard ^jthe word of truth, the Gospel of your salvation:) in whom also, after that ye believed, ^kye were sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise, ¹⁴ which ^lis the earnest of our inheritance ^muntil the redemption of ⁿthe purchased possession, ^ounto the praise of his glory.

St. Paul thanks God for their conversion, and prays that they may be further enlightened in the knowledge of the truth, and attain to the fullest conception of the blessings of the Gospel, and its glorious Author, by whose power Christ was raised from the dead, and exalted to supreme dignity and dominion in this world, and that which is to come—All things are subjected to Him, for the advantage of the Church—which is considered more particularly as his body—of which he is the Supreme Head—The Church receiving the fulness of its spiritual gifts and graces from Him who fills all persons in all places, and is all in all.

¹⁵ WHEREFORE I also, ^aafter I heard of your faith in the Lord Jesus, and love unto all the saints, ^bcease ^cnot to give thanks for you, making mention of you in my prayers; ¹⁷ that ^dthe God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory, ^emay give unto you the Spirit of wisdom and revelation ^fin the knowledge of him: ¹⁸ the ^geyes of your understanding being enlightened; that ye may know what is ^hthe hope of his calling, and what the riches of the glory of his ⁱinheritance in the saints, ¹⁹ and what ^jis the exceeding greatness of his power to us-ward who believe, ^kaccording to the working ^lof his mighty power, ²⁰ which He wrought in Christ, when ^mHe raised him from the dead,

§ 3.—chap. ii. 1–10.

St. Paul, to excite the gratitude of the Ephesians, reminds them of the love of Christ, who hath quickened them, or filled them with his grace, when they were dead in trespasses and sins—He describes their character and conduct in their heathen state—Then in the name of the converted Jews he acknowledges that they also, before their conversion, followed the same course of life, so that they, as well as the Gentiles, had become naturally the children of wrath—But God, in his great mercy, of his own free grace, had provided for them the means of salvation, and had quickened them, or made both the Jews and Gentiles alive in Christ—alive from the death of sin to the life of righteousness, and had raised them up together, or given to them, by his resurrection, the anticipation of their own, and by his exaltation, the hope that they, through him, may be received into heavenly places—thereby declaring the exceeding riches of his mercy and forgiveness through Christ Jesus—For by the mercy of God, through faith, were they saved; not by works of the Mosaic Law, or merit of their own, lest any man should boast, but by the free gift and will of God—For they were his workmanship, He himself having created them in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God had before decreed, by the influences of his Holy Spirit, they should have the power of performing.

¹ AND ^ayou hath He quickened, ^bwho were dead in trespasses and sins, ²(wherein ^cin time past ye walked according to the course of this world, according to ^dthe prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in ^ethe children of disobedience; ³among ^fwhom also we all had our conversation in times past in ^gthe lusts of our flesh, fulfilling ^hthe desires of the flesh and of the mind, and ⁱwere by nature the children of wrath, even as others; ⁴but God, ^jwho is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved us) . . . ⁵even ^kwhen we were dead in sins, hath ^lquickened us together with Christ, (^mby grace ye are saved!) ⁶and hath raised us up together, and made us sit together ⁿin heavenly places in Christ Jesus; ⁷that in the ages to come He might show the exceeding riches of his grace, in ^ohis kindness toward us through Christ Jesus. ⁸For ^pby grace are ye saved ^qthrough faith; and that not of yourselves, ^rit is the gift of God: ^snot ^tof works, lest any man should boast. ¹⁰For we are ^uhis workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, ^vwhich God hath before ^wordained that we should walk in them.

The Apostle, after having described the fallen state of the Jew and Gentile, desires the Gentiles to remember that before they were converted they had no knowledge of Christ—they were alienated from the privileges of the Jewish people, without a part in the covenant of promise made to Abraham; without a well-grounded hope of pardon of sin, or the immortality of the soul; without God in the world—but now, by faith in Christ, them, who were far removed from the covenant of promise, God has brought nigh by the blood of Christ, who has died for Jew and Gentile, and has become a peace-offering, and has formed one Church out of the believers of both people; and by his death in the flesh has abolished the Jewish ordinances that separated them, and were the causes of their enmity; and has united them both in himself, as one new man, or one new body, making peace between them, that he might reconcile both to God by the atoning sacrifice of his body; having slain or destroyed the enmity between God and man, produced by sin—and who, after his resurrection, preached, through his apostles, peace and reconciliation, both to Jew and Gentile, and through him both have access by the same Holy Spirit to the same Father—The Gentiles being no longer strangers, but incorporated with the Jews, are admitted into the same privileges with his holy people; belonging to his house, or visible Church, which is built upon the doctrine taught by the Prophets in the Old, and the Apostles in the New, Dispensation, Jesus Christ himself the corner-stone, connecting the Jews and Gentiles together in the same building—by whom the building, composed of Jews and Gentiles, fitly joined together, groweth by the accession of new converts into a holy temple unto God—And through Christ, they, his brethren, are builded together, that they may become the habitation of God, his Spirit living within them.

¹¹ WHEREFORE ^aremember, that ye being in time past Gentiles in the flesh (who are called Uncircumcision by that which is called ^bthe Circumcision in the flesh made by hands), ¹² that ^cat that time ye were without Christ, ^d(being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from ^ethe covenants of promise, ^fhaving no hope, ^gand without God in the world,) ¹³ but ^hnow in Christ Jesus ye who sometimes were ⁱfar off are made nigh by the blood of Christ. ¹⁴ For ^jhe is our Peace, ^kwho hath made both one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us; ¹⁵ having ^labolished in ^mhis flesh the enmity, even the Law of commandments contained in ordinances; for to make in himself of twain one ⁿnew man, so making peace, ¹⁶ and that he might ^oreconcile both unto God in one body by the cross, ^phaving slain the enmity ^qthereby. ¹⁷ And came ^rand preached peace to you which were afar off, and ^sto them that were nigh; ¹⁸ for ^tthrough him we both have access ^uby one Spirit unto the Father.

¹⁹ Now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but ^vfellow-citizens with the saints, and of ^wthe household of God, ²⁰ and ^xare built ^yupon the foundation of the ^zApostles and Prophets, Jesus Christ himself being ^athe chief corner-stone; ²¹ in ^bwhom all the building fitly framed together groweth unto ^ca holy temple in the Lord: ²² in ^dwhom ye also are builded together for a habitation of God through the Spirit.

St. Paul affirms, that for maintaining the admission of the Gentiles to the same privileges as the Jews, without being bound by the Law of Moses, he was now suffering imprisonment—a circumstance they could not doubt, as they had heard of the dispensation of grace committed to him on their account—That God, by immediate revelation, had revealed to him this doctrine; as he had already told them (chap. i. 9, 10. and ii. 11, to the end)—that the Gentiles should be joint-heirs, united in one body with the Jews, and joint-partakers of his promise concerning Christ by the Gospel—of which he was made a minister, according to the effectual working of the free gift of grace, that he might preach the plan of salvation through Christ—That both Jews and Gentiles may have sufficient light to be able to comprehend the mystery of bringing all mankind to salvation through faith in Christ, which God till now hath kept hidden—although, like the other dispensations, it was created or formed by Jesus Christ from the foundation of the world—That the manifold wisdom of God, gradually discovering itself, might be made evident to the angelic spirits, by his dealings with the Church according to the external arrangements or economy he made or constituted in Christ Jesus, through whom we may freely address our prayers, and have access to God, in the full assurance of being heard through faith.

grace given, that ^aI should preach among the Gentiles 'the unsearchable riches of Christ; ⁹ and to make all men see what is the fellowship of "the mystery," which from the beginning of the world hath been hid in God, ¹⁰ who created all things by Jesus Christ; ¹⁰ to ^xthe intent that now ^yunto the principalities and powers in heavenly places ^zmight be known by the Church the manifold wisdom of God, ¹¹ according ^ato the eternal purpose which he purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord, ¹² in whom we have boldness and ^baccess ^cwith confidence by the faith of him.

St. Paul desires the Ephesians not to be discouraged by his tribulations on their account—as they are for their glory or advantage, proving his fidelity and firm conviction of the truth of the doctrine revealed to him concerning them—That they might not faint, St. Paul prays for them to God; from whom all believers upon earth, and spirits in heaven, are named, that he would grant them, according to the riches of his free mercy, to be mightily strengthened by his Holy Spirit in their inner man, or soul; that being rooted and founded in the love of Christ, they may be able to comprehend the infinite dimensions of the Christian Temple, or Church, which extends over all the earth, reaching to heaven, and is founded on the love of God and of Christ, which surpasses finite knowledge—that they may be filled with all the spiritual gifts of God—To strengthen the faith of the Ephesians who had already experienced the stronger power of God working in them, by the spiritual gifts imparted to them, he ends with a sublime doxology.

¹³ WHEREFORE ^aI desire that ye faint not at my tribulations ^bfor you, ^cwhich is your glory. ¹⁴ For this cause I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, ¹⁵ of whom ^dthe whole family in heaven and earth is named, ¹⁶ that He would grant you, ^eaccording to the riches of his glory, ^fto be strengthened with might by his Spirit ^gin the inner man; ¹⁷ that ^hChrist may dwell in your hearts by faith; that ye, ⁱbeing rooted and grounded in love, ¹⁸ may ^jbe able to comprehend with all saints ^kwhat is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height; ¹⁹ and to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that ye might be filled ^lwith all the fulness of God.

²⁰ Now ^munto Him that is able to do exceeding abundantly ⁿabove all that we ask or think, ^oaccording to the power that worketh in us, ²¹ unto ^pHim be glory in the Church by Christ Jesus throughout all ages, world without end! Amen.

As an inducement to the Ephesians to attend to his exhortations, he reminds them that he is now a prisoner of the Lord for their sakes—that he who is in bondage calls on them who are at liberty to walk worthy of the high privileges to which they are called—in subjection, meekness, patience, bearing with one another—that they may keep that unity which becomes those who are regenerated and influenced by one Spirit, joining them together in the bond of peace—For in the Gospel of Christ there is no division—There is one body, or Church of Christ—one Holy Spirit animating that body—one hope of everlasting life—one Lord who is head of that body—one system of religion, and condition of salvation—one baptism in the name of the Holy Trinity—and one God—The Father of Jews and Gentiles, who is above all, and pervades all—and through his Spirit is in all.

St. Paul shows that the same God who makes all mankind equal in their spiritual blessings, has allotted to every man offices suitable to the exercise and nature of those gifts he has received, according to the words of David, (Ps. lxxviii. 18.)—Now this expression that he ascended, implies that he descended first into the lower parts of the earth; that he came down from heaven, and submitted to lie in the grave of death; and that he, who descended, and humbled himself, is the same Divine Being who ascended into the heaven of heavens, that he might become the fountain of all blessings, and fill both Jews and Gentiles with the gifts and graces of his Holy Spirit, according to their different functions—That he has instituted a variety of offices in the Church for its edification and perfection, till Jews and Gentiles are all converted to the Christian faith, and have attained to the true knowledge of the incarnation and atonement of the Son of God, till the Church as a body has arrived to the maturity of a perfect man, to the full measure of the spiritual stature, endued with all the fulness of the gifts of Christ—He exhorts them, therefore, to become steadfast in their faith, and not to be easily led astray by the deception and cunning craftiness of the Judaizing teachers, but to adhere to the doctrines of the Gospel, in that love and charity which it inculcates; that they may grow up as members of his body, who is the Head, even Christ; by whom the whole body of Christians being joined together in one Church, and every member fitted for its own office or place, like the human body, grows to maturity by the proper exercise of the spiritual functions of its individual members.

⁷ BUT ^aunto every one of us is given grace according to the measure of the gift of Christ. ⁸ (Wherefore He ^bsaith,—

“When he ascended up on high, ^che led ^{*}captivity captive,
And gave gifts unto men.”

⁹ Now ^dthat he ascended, what is it but that he also descended [first] into the lower parts of the earth? ¹⁰ He that descended is the same also ^ethat ascended up far above all heavens, ^fthat he might [†]fill all things.) ¹¹ And ^ghe gave some, Apostles; and some, Prophets; and some, ^hEvangelists; and some, ⁱPastors and ^jTeachers; ¹² for ^kthe perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, ^lfor the edifying of ^mthe body of Christ; ¹³ till we all come ⁿin the unity of the faith, ^oand of the knowledge of ^pthe Son of God, unto ^qa perfect man, unto the measure of the ^rstature of the fulness of Christ: ¹⁴ that we ^shenceforth be no more ^tchildren, ^utossed to and fro, and carried about with every ^vwind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, ^wand cunning craftiness ^xwhereby they lie in wait to deceive; ¹⁵ but ^yspeaking ^zthe truth in love, ^{aa}may grow up into him in all things, ^{ab}which is the Head, ^{ac}even Christ: ¹⁶ from ^{ad}whom the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love.

The Apostle, in the name, and by the authority of Christ, commands the Ephesians to renounce the vices which prevailed among the unconverted Gentiles, in the foolishness and darkness of their minds, who are alienated from the principles of true religion, and have lost the divine life in the soul, by reason of their insensible obstinacy; who, being devoid of the sense of shame, had given themselves over to the grossest profligacy and uncleanness—But they, who have heard and received the doctrines of Christianity, are taught better things—They are required to put off the old man, or the unconverted, natural, and animal character, whose actions are regulated by the lusts of the flesh, and to be renewed in the general temper and faculties of their minds, to become new creatures, created again after the image of God, in righteousness and true holiness.

not so learned Christ; ²¹ if ^hso be that ye have heard Him, and have been taught by Him, as the truth is in Jesus: ²² that ye ⁱput off concerning ^jthe former conversation ^kthe old man, which is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts; ²³ and ^lbe renewed in the spirit of your mind, ²⁴ and that ye ^mput on the new man, which after God ⁿis created in righteousness and [†]true holiness.

The Apostle exhorts those who are thus renewed to put off the sin of lying and prevarication, which was countenanced by some of their heathen philosophers—He desires them to consider themselves as one body, and not to let one member deceive another—He cautions them against anger, more particularly against its continued indulgence, which excites malice, and gives an opportunity to the Devil to tempt to sin—He prohibits stealing, which was partly permitted by the rabbins, provided a portion was given to the poor; and commands them to act honestly, and to labor, that they may have to give to him that needeth—To abstain from all impure conversation, and to endeavour in their discourse to minister grace, and to edify those with whom they conversed—Not to grieve the Holy Spirit of God, so as to banish him from them, for by his influence on their souls they are marked or sealed until the day of redemption from eternal death.

The Apostle continues his practical exhortations, and again cautions them against those malignant passions which are likely to grieve or deprive them of the Holy Spirit of God—He prohibits anger in all its various modifications, and solicits them to be kind and obliging to each other, compassionate, forgiving injuries, on their acknowledgment, as God through Christ has forgiven them—To be imitators of God in these things, as his beloved children, every act of their life proceeding from love one to another for the sake of the exceeding love of Christ, who gave himself a sin offering and an atoning sacrifice to God for us—To make himself more explicit, and to show that the love he recommended was pure and benevolent, St. Paul immediately and forcibly prohibits fornication, and every kind of uncleanness, (to which the unconverted Ephesians were particularly addicted.) with every sort of indelicacy either in thought or conversation, as being inconsistent with the Christian character, which requires the language of praise and thanksgiving—St. Paul warns the Ephesians not to be deceived in these matters by their philosophers, who were the great promoters of such abominable practices—The divine punishment will surely come upon them; therefore they were not to be as formerly, partakers with them—While they were in darkness they were guilty of the same enormities; but now that they have attained to the light of the Gospel of Christ, they are required to act as children of the light, in the works of the Spirit, proving by their conduct what is acceptable to God; having no communion whatever with the heathens in their worship; but reproving them for their mysteries, which are performed in darkness and secrecy, and which it is dishonorable even to mention—All works of darkness have their exceeding sinfulness made manifest by the light—Since then the Gospel condemns and reveals to them the iniquity of these secret mysteries, the Gospel itself is light, which calls upon all who are in darkness, to awake and receive its light.

³¹ LET ^aall bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamor, and ^bevil speaking, be put away from you, ^cwith all malice: ³² and ^dbe ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, ^eforgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you. ¹ Be ^fye therefore followers of God, as dear children; ² and ^gwalk in love, ^has Christ also hath loved us, and hath given himself for us, an offering and a sacrifice to God

The Apostle exhorts the Ephesians, as children of light, to walk circumspectly according to the rules and doctrines of the Gospel; not after the manner of the Gentiles, who have no wisdom; but as those who have been instructed in the true wisdom, improving to the uttermost their present time, that they may regain in some degree that which was lost; because, from the trials and persecutions that surround them, both their life and liberty are in danger—In allusion to the Bacchanalian mysteries, he commands them not to be unwise, or become as madmen, but have such right knowledge of their duty, as may enable them to perform it; that they may not on these heathen festivals be drunk with wine, which leads to dissoluteness, but, if they would rejoice, let them be filled with the Spirit of God; and, instead of singing profane and sinful songs, let them join in spiritual psalms and hymns, not only with their lips but their hearts, giving thanks to God under every circumstance, through the prevailing name of Jesus Christ.

The Apostle directs that every man yield his opinion, that the general peace may not be disturbed; considering that God has commanded them to love one another—He proceeds to the further illustration of their duty, in the more intimate connexions of life—He exhorts wives to submit themselves, according to the ordinance of God, to their own husbands, for the husband is the head or governor of the wife, as Christ is the head or governor of his body the Church; and as Christ exercises authority over the Church, for its safety and protection, in like manner is the husband to provide for, and protect, his wife; and as the Church is subject to Christ, so is the wife required to yield obedience to her husband—He exhorts husbands to love their wives, as Christ loved his spouse, the Church; and to show the devotedness of that love, he enumerates all that Christ has done and suffered for the Church, that he might form it for himself, purified and perfect; and then calls upon all husbands so to love their wives, and to show the same zealous affection and anxiety for their spiritual welfare, as Christ did for his body the Church—Then in reference to our first parents, he declares, that the wife by marriage being made one flesh with the husband, this was a natural reason why she should be loved and cherished by him, as the Lord nourishes his body the Church, of which mankind are members; and as Adam's marriage was a figure of the eternal union of Christ with believers, on whose account he left his Father; so in the same way shall a man leave his father and mother, and be inseparably united to his wife—The spiritual union of Christ with his Church is a great mystery; but let every one, as marriage is of divine institution, love his wife as a part of himself, and let the wife see that she consider her husband as her superior and head.

²⁵ Husbands, ^hlove your wives, even as Christ also loved the Church, and ⁱgave himself for it, ²⁶that he might sanctify [it]; and cleanse ^jit with the washing of water ^kby the word, ²⁷that ^lhe might present it to himself a glorious Church, ^mnot having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing, ⁿbut that it should be holy and without blemish. ²⁸So ought men to love their wives as their own bodies. He that loveth his wife loveth himself; ²⁹for no man ever yet hated his own flesh, but nourisheth and cherisheth it, even as the Lord the Church. ³⁰For ^owe are members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones. ³¹For ^pthis cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and shall be joined unto his wife, and they ^qtwo shall be one flesh. ³²This is a great ^rmystery; but I speak concerning Christ and the Church. ³³Nevertheless ^slet every one of you in particular so love his wife even as himself; and the wife see that she ^treverence her husband.

Children are commanded to obey their parents, who have a right to their gratitude and love, in obedience to that commandment which God gave to Moses, and to which, as a further encouragement, he has annexed the promise of temporal blessings—Fathers are to take care that by an excess of severity they do not provoke their children to disobedience and feelings of anger, but correct them, and educate them from their earliest infancy in the subjection, precepts, and doctrines of the Gospel—Servants, of every rank, are commanded to be obedient to their masters, in all secular things; and to be cautious of giving offence, from a principle of duty to Christ—Servants are not to be satisfied with doing their duty only when they are subjected to the eye of their master, as if their desire was to gain the favor of man; but to do it from the motive of obedience to the will of God, cheerfully fulfilling the duties of their station as the servants of Christ, and not as the servants of men only, knowing that from the Lord they will receive their reward—He entreats masters to act towards their servants in the same conscientious and faithful manner, upon the same religious principles, avoiding punishment, knowing that they are accountable to their Master in heaven, who in judging his creatures will show no respect of persons, whatever difference exists between them here.

¹ CHILDREN, ^aobey your parents in the Lord: for this is right. ²Honor ^bthy father and mother; (which is the first commandment with promise;) ³that it may be well with thee, and thou mayest live long on the earth.—⁴And, ^cye fathers, provoke not your children to wrath: but ^dbring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.—⁵Servants, ^ebe obedient to them that are your masters according to the flesh, ^fwith fear and trembling, ^gin singleness of your heart, as unto Christ: ^hnot ⁱwith eyeservice, as men-pleasers, but as the servants of Christ, doing the will of God; from the heart ^jwith good will doing service, as to the Lord, and not to men; ^kknowing ^lthat whatsoever good thing any man doeth, the same shall he receive of the Lord, ^mwhether he be bond or free.—ⁿAnd, ye ^omasters, do the same things unto them, ^pforbearing ^qthreatening: knowing ^rthat ^syour Master also is in heaven, ^tneither is there respect of persons with him.

The Apostle, having instructed the Ephesians in their duties, and in the knowledge of their high calling, concludes his Epistle by beseeching them not to rely on their own strength for the performance of them, but to have and to trust in that spiritual strength which God alone can give—They are to clothe themselves with the whole armor of God, with the graces of the Gospel, that being covered therewith, they may be able to stand against the crafty attacks and machinations of the Devil : for their warfare is not only against the corruption of our own nature, or human beings, but with mighty spirits, once inhabiting celestial principalities, who are the rulers of the darkness which pervades the world, and the highest orders of spiritual wickedness, who fell from their heavenly places—Since they have such enemies to fight against, they are to take unto them the whole armor of God, that they may be able to stand in the day of danger ; and having exerted themselves to the uttermost, he prays that, at the end of their warfare, they may be found standing in their ranks victorious—He urges them to prepare therefore for this combat by having their loins girt with the Gospel of truth, which will enable them to discover their spiritual enemies—To provide the breastplate, or the principle of righteousness, which will defend them from their attacks, and to have their feet shod, that they may be prepared to withstand every difficulty that may obstruct their publishing the Gospel of reconciliation between God and man—Above all, they are to take the shield of faith, the firm belief of the doctrines and promises of the Gospel ; by which they will be fully protected from, and will be able to blunt or to arrest, all the fiery darts, or deadly temptations of their adversaries, and to take also the helmet of salvation, the hope of a complete deliverance, and hold in their hand the spiritual sword, the word of God, revealed by his Holy Spirit.

That the Ephesians may be acquainted with his situation and circumstances at Rome, and in all probability being unwilling to trust the account of them to writing, St. Paul sends Tychicus for this very purpose with his Epistle, that they may know from him what relates to them both, and that he might comfort their hearts by the account he shall give them of the divine support afforded under his present tribulation—He concludes with an ardent prayer for the spiritual peace and mutual love of the brethren, founded on that faith which proceeds from God and Christ ; and prays that his grace may not only be with them, but with all believers who love in sincerity the Lord Jesus Christ.

²¹ BUT ^athat ye also may know my affairs, and how I do, ^bTychicus, a beloved brother and faithful minister in the Lord, shall make known to you all things : ²² whom ^cI have sent unto you for the same purpose, that ye might know our affairs, and ^dthat he might comfort your hearts. ²³ Peace ^ebe ^fto the brethren, and love with faith, from God the Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ ! ²⁴ Grace ^gbe with all them that love our Lord Jesus ^hChrist ⁱin sincerity ! [Amen.]

SECTION XI.—*St. Paul writes his Epistle to the Philippians, to comfort them under the Concern they had expressed on the Subject of his Imprisonment, to exhort them to continue in Union and Mutual Love, and to caution them against the Seductions of false Teachers, who had begun to introduce themselves among them.*¹

THE EPISTLE TO THE PHILIPPIANS.

§ 1.—chap. i. 1–11.

St. Paul, in conjunction with Timothy, addresses himself to all the saints at Philippi, with their bishops and deacons, and gives them his apostolical benediction—He thanks God for their conversion in every prayer he offers, with joy making prayer for their continued blessings, and for their participation in the faith of the Gospel from the first day of his preaching it till now; for he is confident that he who has begun a good work in them, will be completing it till the day of death—He tells them it is reasonable for him to hold this opinion of them, because they had remembered him in his bonds, (chap. ii. 25. iv. 14.)—He declares that his love for them resembles that which Jesus Christ felt for mankind; and he prays that their mutual love to each other, and love to God, may increase with the knowledge of God's perfections, and with their spiritual sense of his truth; that by their own experience they may judge of every doctrine, by comparing it with these they had received: that they may be sincere in their profession of the Gospel, neither offending man nor God by their own apostacy till the hour of their death, having their whole life filled with holy actions and tempers, according to the doctrine of Christ, that God, through his Spirit working in them, may be glorified.

³ I ^cthank my God upon every ^{*}remembrance of you, ⁴always in every prayer of mine for you all (making request with joy), ⁵for ^dyour fellowship in the Gospel from the first day until now; ⁶being confident of this very thing, that he which hath begun ^ea good work in you [†]will perform it [‡]until the day of Jesus Christ: ⁷even as it is meet for me to think this of you all, because [‡]I have you ^ein my heart; inasmuch as both ^hin my bonds, and in ⁱthe defence and confirmation of the Gospel, ^jye all are ^{*}partakers of my grace. ⁸For ^kGod is my record, ^lhow greatly I long after you all in the bowels of Jesus Christ. ⁹And this I pray, ^mthat your love may abound yet more and more in knowledge and in all [†]judgment; ¹⁰that ⁿye may [†]approve things that ^{*}are excellent, ^othat ye may be sincere and without offence ^ptill the day of Christ; ¹¹being filled with the fruits of righteousness, ^qwhich are by Jesus Christ, ^runto the glory and praise of God.

The Apostle next comforts them with the assurance that his long imprisonment has tended to promote the Gospel; being made the means of causing it to be known in the emperor's palace, and all over Rome—That many Christian brethren, gaining confidence by his success and firmness, were now emboldened to preach it—Some indeed preach Christ for the purpose of division and envy, asserting him to be the long-predicted King of the Jews (Acts xvii. 3, 7.), a doctrine particularly offensive to the Romans, and some from goodwill and friendship to himself—The first preach Christ from contention, that they might provoke the Roman magistrates against him, thereby intending to add other rigors to his imprisonment; and the other from a sincere love of the Gospel, well knowing that he was sent to Rome for the purpose of defending it both by his sufferings and his preaching—He rejoices in the advancement of the Gospel, in whatever way it be made known—His confidence that the knowledge of the nature of the Gospel will be made the means of his deliverance, through their prayers: and the Spirit of Jesus Christ supplying him with grace during his trials, before his persecutors, according to his earnest expectation and hope, that he may not be ashamed fully at this time to declare, as he had ever done, the truth of the Gospel, that Christ might be still magnified in his body, through his Spirit, whether by his release or by his death.

of the Gospel ; ¹³ so that my bonds ^{*}in Christ are manifest ^ain all [†]the palace, and [‡]in all other places, ¹⁴ and many of the brethren in the Lord, waxing confident by my bonds, are much more bold to speak the word without fear.

¹⁵ Some indeed preach Christ even of envy and ^bstrife ; and some also of good will. ¹⁶ The one preach Christ of contention, not sincerely, supposing to add affliction to my bonds ; ¹⁷ but the other of love, knowing that I am set for ^cthe defence of the Gospel. ¹⁸ What then ? notwithstanding every way, whether in pretence, or in truth, Christ is preached ; and I therein do rejoice, yea, and will rejoice. ¹⁹ For I know that this shall turn to my salvation ^dthrough your prayer, and the supply of ^ethe Spirit of Jesus Christ, ²⁰ according to my ^fearnest expectation and my hope, that ^gin nothing I shall be ashamed, but that ^hwith all boldness, as always, so now also Christ shall be magnified in my body, whether it be by life, or by death.

The Apostle declares that his life belongs to, or is the property of, Christ, but that death would be to his own happiness—If his life is continued, the honor of Christ would be the fruit of his labors ; if therefore he had his own choice, he would hesitate which to prefer, having a desire to depart, and to be immediately with Christ, which is inexpressibly better than continuing in this world, as far as he is himself concerned—But to continue in the flesh is more expedient for them ; and being convinced of this he is persuaded that his life will be continued for their furtherance in the way of salvation, and for their joy, arising from their faith, which will be strengthened by his deliverance, giving occasion for more abundant reason to rejoice in Jesus Christ, who had again restored him unto them—But whatever happens to him, their conduct should be consistent with the Gospel of Christ, that, whether he is with them or absent from them, he may hear that they stand fast in one spirit and with one mind, contending for the faith of the Gospel : and are not terrified at the persecutions to which they may be exposed by unbelievers ; as these are evident tokens of their own approaching destruction, but to them are clear proofs of salvation, and that by the power of God himself—For to them it is graciously permitted, for the sake of Christ, not only to believe in him, but also to suffer for him, that they may more abundantly partake of his glory, being called to the same conflict with the adversaries of the Gospel, as they saw in him when he was with them at Philippi (Acts xvi. 19–40.), and now hear to be in him at Rome.

²¹ For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain. ²² But if I live in the flesh, this is the fruit of my labor : yet what I shall choose I wot not. ²³ For ^aI am in a strait betwixt two, having a desire to ^bdepart, and to be with Christ, which is far better ; ²⁴ nevertheless to abide in the flesh is more needful for you. ²⁵ And ^chaving this confidence, I know that I shall abide and continue with you all for your furtherance and joy of faith ; ²⁶ that ^dyour rejoicing may be more abundant in Jesus Christ for me by my coming to you again.

²⁷ Only ^elet your conversation be as it becometh the Gospel of Christ : that whether I come and see you, or else be absent, I may hear of your affairs, ^fthat ye stand fast in one spirit, ^gwith one mind ^hstriving together for the faith of the Gospel ; ²⁸ and in nothing terrified by your adversaries : ⁱwhich is to them an evident token of perdition, ^jbut to you of salvation, and that of God ; ²⁹ for unto you ^kit is given in the behalf of Christ, ^lnot only to believe on him, but also to suffer for his sake—³⁰ having ^mthe same conflict ⁿwhich ye saw in me, and now hear to be in me.

which end he cautions them never for the sake of distinction to oppose each other in the exercise of their spiritual gifts, but by a humility of conduct, to show that they reckon others better than themselves—He cautions them to set a proper regard on the gifts and interests of others, as well as on those which more immediately concern themselves—that the same disposition should be in them as was in Christ Jesus, who labored not for his own interest, but for the salvation of all mankind, who before his incarnation being in the form of God, or his visible glory (Deut. v. 23, 24.), divested himself of all his glory; and he, who was before in the form of God, assumed the form of a servant, and being made in the likeness of man, he subjected himself to the lowest degree of humiliation for the sins of men, by submitting to the most ignominious death of the cross; for which reason God has highly exalted his human nature, and hath given him a name, which expresses a dignity beyond any other—the name Jesus, or Saviour of the world, who was to be acknowledged as the author of salvation, by the angelic hosts of heaven, by the human beings of earth, and by fallen spirits under the earth, that every intelligent being shall confess that Jesus Christ has an authority and preëminence over all.

¹ If there be therefore any consolation in Christ, if any comfort of love, ² if any fellowship of the Spirit, if any ³ bowels and mercies, ⁴ fulfil ye my joy, ⁵ that ye be like minded, having the same love, being of one accord, of one mind: ⁶ let ⁷ nothing be done through strife or vain-glory; but ⁸ in lowliness of mind let each esteem other better than themselves: ⁹ look ¹⁰ not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others. ¹¹ Let ¹² this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus: ¹³ who, ¹⁴ being in the form of God, ¹⁵ thought it not robbery to be equal with God: ¹⁶ but ¹⁷ made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form ¹⁸ of a servant, and ¹⁹ was made in the ²⁰ likeness of men: ²¹ and being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and ²² became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. ²³ Wherefore God also ²⁴ hath highly exalted him, and ²⁵ given him a name which is above every name: ²⁶ that ²⁷ at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth; ²⁸ and ²⁹ that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father.

St. Paul exhorts the Philippians, that although he is not with them to remind them of their duty, they may continue to walk in the humility and disinterestedness of Christ, working out their own salvation with fear and trembling, knowing that it is God, by his Holy Spirit inwardly working in them, who affords them, after his sovereign pleasure, both the will and the power to accomplish their salvation—He cautions them that all things be done without murmurings and disputings, that they may be blameless in themselves, and inoffensive to others, showing by their holy conduct that they are partakers of the divine nature, not meriting rebuke in the midst of a crooked and perverse generation of unbelieving ^{*} Jews, among whom they shine as the heavenly luminaries, giving light to a dark world, holding out to all men the doctrine of eternal life, that he may have reason to rejoice at the day of judgment on their account, by which means it will appear that he has neither exerted his apostolic office, nor labored in vain.

The Apostle, comparing the faith of the Philippians to an acceptable sacrifice presented through his labors to God, assures them that he is willing and ready that his blood should be poured forth as the libation on that sacrifice; and should he be thus called upon to suffer, he entreats them to rejoice with him that he is accounted worthy of so high an honor—But he trusts to send Timotheus to them, that he may learn from him the exact state of their affairs; for he knows no man who is so like himself in the interest he takes in their spiritual concerns; for all the teachers seek their own interests and advancement rather than the interests of Jesus Christ—But they themselves have experienced the goodness of Timothy, who labored with him in their cares, as a son with a father, (Acts xvi. 1-3. xix. 22.)—him therefore he meant to send to them, as soon as he ascertained how his affairs will be determined; but he still trusts, through the providence of God, to visit them shortly; in the mean time he sends Epaphroditus, whom he highly commends; and he is further induced to send him with these despatches, because he longed to see them all, and was exceedingly dejected and troubled that they should have heard of his sickness—By his frequent preachings in Rome and its neighbourhood, and by his personal attendance on them, he has labored beyond his strength, risking his life, endeavouring to supply in his own person all the assistance they would have given him, had it been possible for them to have been present with him.

¹⁷ YEA, and if ^aI be ^{*}offered upon the sacrifice ^band service of your faith, ^cI joy, and rejoice with you all; ¹² for the same cause also do ye joy, and rejoice with me.

¹⁹ †But I trust in the Lord Jesus to send ^aTimotheus shortly unto you, that I also may be of good comfort, when I know your state.

²² But ye know the proof of him, ^ethat, as a son with the father, he hath served with me in the Gospel. ²³ Him therefore I hope to send presently, so soon as I shall see how it will go with me; ²⁴ but ^hI trust in the Lord that I also myself shall come shortly.

²⁵ Yet I supposed it necessary to send to you ⁱEpaphroditus, my brother, and companion in labor, and ^jfellow-soldier, ^kbut your messenger, and ^lhe that ministered to my wants; ²⁶ for ^mhe longed after you all, and was full of heaviness, because that ye had heard that he had been sick. ²⁷ For indeed he was sick nigh unto death: but God had mercy on him; and not on him only, but on me also, lest I should have sorrow upon sorrow. ²⁸ I sent him therefore the more carefully; that, when ye see him again, ye may rejoice, and that I may be the less sorrowful. ²⁹ Receive him therefore in the Lord with all gladness; ³⁰ and ⁿhold such in reputation. ³⁰ Because for the work of Christ he was nigh unto death, not regarding his life, ^oto supply your lack of service toward me.

St. Paul exhorts them to rejoice in their knowledge of the truth and promises of the Gospel—He cautions them to beware of the Jews, designated as they now were, cast out of the covenant by the same appellation which they formerly gave to the Gentiles—To beware of the evil laborers who corrupt the doctrines of the Gospel, of those who call themselves the circumcision, but are rather the concision cut off from the Christian Church—For they are the true circumcision who have embraced the Gospel, and worship God not in the ritual observance of the Law, but in the spirit and perfection of it, making their boast in Christ Jesus, and having no confidence in any rite or ceremony prescribed by the Law—If, however, any of the Judaizing teachers have cause to boast of their outward rites and privileges, he has more reason to do so—He was circumcised on the eighth day, descended from the patriarch Jacob—from his most favored son—from Hebrew parents—and with respect to the Law, was educated in that sect most scrupulously attached to it—He gave proof of his zeal in the persecution of the Church, and concerning the righteousness which is placed in the exact observance of the Mosaic Law, and obedience to its outward precepts, he was blameless—But those things which he then considered his gain, he counts now as loss; and all things for which men value themselves, he counts as loss, because they cannot be compared to the excellency of the knowledge of salvation through Christ, for whose sake he has suffered the loss of all worldly things, which are as the vilest refuse, that he may gain the promises of Christ, and be found a believer in him as a Saviour, not holding his own righteousness, which is of the Jewish Law, but that righteousness which is by faith in Christ's atonement, which God has ordained for the justification of sinners—That he may know him as his Saviour, to feel in himself the influential power of his resurrection, by dying as he did, a martyr to the truth of the Gospel, so that by any possible means he may attain to a glorious resurrection from the dead.

¹ FINALLY, my brethren, ^arejoice in the Lord; to write the same things to you, to me indeed is not grievous, but for you it is safe.

² Beware ^bof dogs, beware of ^cevil workers, ^dbeware of the Circumcision. ³ For we are ^ethe Circumcision, ^fwhich worship God in the spirit, and ^grejoice in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh; ⁴ though ^hI might also have confidence in the flesh. If any other man thinketh that he hath whereof he might trust in the flesh, I more: ⁵ circumcised ⁱthe eighth day, ^jof the stock of Israel, ^kof the tribe of Benjamin, ^la Hebrew of the Hebrews; as touching the Law—a ^mPharisee; ⁶ concerning ⁿzeal—persecuting ^othe Church; ^ptouching the righteousness which is in the Law—^qblameless. ⁷ But ^rwhat things were gain to me, those I counted loss for Christ. ⁸ Yea doubtless, and I count all things but loss ^sfor the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord: for whom I have suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but dung, that I may win Christ, ⁹ and be found in him, not having ^tmine own righteousness, which is of the Law, but ^uthat which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God by faith: ¹⁰ that I may know him, and the power of his resurrection, and ^vthe fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death; ¹¹ if by any means I might ^wattain unto the resurrection of the dead.

The Apostle pursues his subject by asserting, that they are not to suppose from what he has just said, that he considers himself to have attained already to all that he wishes to be, or had become already perfect; but that he is still pursuing after that perfection of character which the Gospel requires, in the hope that he may be able to apprehend that height of excellence; for which purpose alone he is apprehended or laid hold on by Christ Jesus, when he called him to the knowledge of his Gospel—He is far from considering himself as having attained to the holiness required of him; but like those who contend for their own games, forgetting the progress he has already made, he is putting forth his whole strength in running towards those things that are before him, eagerly pressing forward in the appointed course of faith and holiness, to the glorious prize of eternal life, proposed to him when called by Jesus Christ—He tells all who are fully instructed in the knowledge of divine things, to be equally anxious with him to obtain this glorious prize; and God by his Spirit will reveal his truth unto them—But according to the knowledge to which they have already attained, all are to regulate their conduct, and have the same glorious object in view—the prize of eternal life through Christ Jesus.

¹² Not as though I had already ^aattained, either were already ^bperfect: but I follow after, if that I may apprehend that for which also I am apprehended of Christ Jesus. ¹³ Brethren, I count not myself to have apprehended: but this one thing I do, ^cforgetting those things which are behind, and ^dreaching forth unto those things which are before, ¹⁴ I ^epress toward the mark for the prize of ^fthe high calling of God in Christ Jesus. ¹⁵ Let us therefore, as many as be ^gperfect, ^hbe thus minded: and if in any thing ye be otherwise minded, God shall reveal even this unto you. ¹⁶ Nevertheless, whereto we have already attained, ⁱlet us walk ^jby the same rule, ^klet us mind the same thing.

St. Paul exhorts them in all spiritual things to follow after him, to keep their attention steadily fixed on those who walk in holiness and suffering, according as they have St. Paul, Epaphroditus, and Timothy for an example—For many teachers, he grieves to relate, walk very differently from him, endeavouring to incorporate the Jewish rites with the Gospel, who are the opposers of the sacrificial death of Christ, whose end is perdition, whose God is their sensual appetites, who glory in the things which cause their shame, and whose whole minds are engrossed in earthly things—But they, unlike these Jewish teachers, do not mind earthly things, for their thoughts and affections, as well as their real home and citizenship, was in heaven, from whence also they look for the Saviour of the world, who shall carry them thither, and shall alter the condition of their body, adjudged to death through sin, giving it a similar form to his own eternal and glorious body, according to that strong working by which he 'is able to conquer and subdue all things, even death and the grave, to himself—Therefore he entreats and charges all, as his beloved brethren, the objects of his strongest desires, his crown and rejoicing in the Lord on that great day, to stand fast in all the doctrines of the Gospel, as it becomes those so tenderly beloved by him, and who have the expectations of so glorious a change.

¹⁷ BRETHREN, ^abe followers together of me, and mark them which walk so as ^bye have us for an ensample. ¹⁸ (For many walk, of whom I have told you often, and now tell you even weeping, that they are ^cthe enemies of the cross of Christ: ¹⁹ whose ^dend is destruction, ^ewhose God is their belly, and ^fwhose glory is in their shame, ^gwho mind earthly things.) ²⁰ For ^hour conversation is in heaven; ⁱfrom whence also we ^jlook for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ: ²¹ who ^kshall change our vile body [that it may be fashioned] like unto his glorious body, ^laccording to the working whereby he is able ^meven to subdue all things unto himself. ¹ Therefore, my brethren dearly beloved and ⁿlonged for, ^omy joy and crown, so ^pstand fast in the Lord, my dearly beloved!

St. Paul particularly beseeches Euodias and Syntyché, two Christian women of note, supposed to be deaconesses in the Church at Philippi, who had differed in some point of doctrine or practice, to lay aside their dispute, and to be united in that mutual friendship and love, which the Gospel requires; and he entreats one, whom he calls his true yoke-fellow, to assist those pious women, who labored with him in the Gospel with Clement also, and the rest of his fellow-laborers, whose names he is persuaded are written in the Book of Life, although not mentioned by him—All are exhorted to rejoice in the hope and privileges of the Gospel, in that spiritual happiness derived only through Christ; and again, he observes, it is their duty and interest to rejoice—Their moderation in all the pursuits and enjoyments of life, and in the injuries and indignities to which they may be exposed, are to be visible in the whole of their conduct, for the Lord is at hand—He can quickly put an end to all temporal enjoyments, and all that they can suffer from their enemies—Whatever therefore occurs, they are to be anxiously distressed about nothing, but in every trouble and difficulty with solemn prayer and supplication, with thanksgivings for evils and dangers escaped, let their petitions be breathed out before God—and by these devotional exercises they will obtain that peace of God which can be explained by none, which shall guard their hearts and minds through Jesus Christ, undisturbed by the fear of suffering or of death—Finally, he exhorts them to the practice of every thing that is just, honorable, pure, and holy; all that is calculated to promote the general good of mankind; and is therefore worthy of praise, and those things also in which they have been instructed by him, and have received by faith as a revelation from God, and heard from his preaching, and seen in his conduct while laboring among them; and God, who is the author of peace, through the sacrifice of his Son, shall remain with them for ever.

² I BESEECH Euodias, and beseech Syntyché, ^athat they be of the same mind in the Lord. ³ And I entreat thee also, true ^byoke-fellow, help those women which ^clabored with me in the Gospel, with Clement also, and with other my fellow-laborers, whose names are in ^dthe Book of Life.

The Apostle, in returning to his own affairs, thanks God for their liberality to him, which had been for a time checked by want of opportunity; but was now revived by Epaphroditus—At the same time he affirms, that he does not speak this for the purpose of obtaining further supplies for his own necessities, for he has learnt, under every circumstance and privation, to be contented; satisfied that the providence and goodness of God would determine the best for him—He has been fully initiated into the mysteries of adversity and prosperity; in all things he is instructed both to have food, and to be without it—to abound in the conveniences of life, and to be in want of its necessary supplies; but he is enabled through Christ, that strengthened him, to do and to suffer all things; but, notwithstanding these his feelings, they have acted well, consistently with their holy profession, and their love for him in sending him relief in his afflictions—And in this respect they have never been remiss, for in the beginning of the Gospel, when he left them, and went forth into Macedonia, they were the only Church, out of all those he founded, who communicated with him in the matter of giving him money, and his receiving money—For even in Thessalonica he was supported in his necessities by their contributions, and by his own labors (1 Thess. ii. 9.)—He does not, however, bring this to their remembrance, that he may incite them to send him another gift; but because he wishes them to bear such fruit as shall abound to their account in the day of the Lord—For he has now all the necessities of life, having received from Epaphroditus the things they sent him, which he considers as a fragrant odor, an acceptable offering to God, who is well pleased at the assistance afforded his servants—And as they have given to him in his distress, God shall supply all their wants, according to his riches, in the blessings of Providence, grace, and glory—He concludes with a doxology.

[[It was written to the Philippians from Rome by Epaphroditus.]]

[END OF THE EPISTLE TO THE PHILIPPIANS.]

SECTION XII.—St. Paul writes his Epistle to the Colossians in reply to the Message of Epaphras, to prove that the Hope of Man's Salvation is founded on the Atonement of Christ alone, and by the Establishment of opposite Truths to eradicate the Errors of the Judaizers, who not only preached the Mosaic Law, but also the Opinions of the Heathen, Oriental, or Essenian Philosophers, concerning the Worship of Angels, on Account of their supposed Agency in Human Affairs, and the Necessity of abstaining from Animal Food.*

THE EPISTLE TO THE COLOSSIANS.

§ 1.—chap. i. 1-14.

St. Paul begins his Epistle by assuring the Colossians that he was appointed an Apostle of Christ by the will of God—The salutation of Paul and Timothy, who do not cease praying, that the Colossians may be filled with a perfect knowledge of divine things, comprehending the spiritual wisdom of God, fruitful in every good work, increasing in experience of the knowledge of God's love and truth; spiritually strengthened according to his glorious power, so that they may be able to bear all things with the greatest patience and long-suffering, and even with joy, feeling that by so doing they please God—Giving thanks to God, who of his own free mercy, by the sanctifying influences of his Spirit, has qualified them to be partakers of the spiritual inheritance prepared for those who dwell in the light of the Gospel—who has delivered them from the power of sin and ignorance, and hath translated us from the kingdom of darkness into the kingdom of light, governed by his dear Son—who has paid down the price of redemption in his own blood, even the remission of sins.

¹ PAUL, ^aan apostle of Jesus Christ by the will of God, and Timotheus our brother, ² to the saints ^band faithful brethren in Christ which are at Colossé! ^cGrace be unto you, and peace, from God our Father [and the Lord Jesus Christ]! ³ We ^dgive thanks to God and the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, praying always for you, ⁴ since ^ewe heard of your faith in Christ Jesus, and of ^fthe love which ye have to all the saints, ⁵ for the hope ^gwhich is laid up for you in heaven, whereof ye heard before in the word of the truth of the Gospel; ⁶ which is come unto you, ^has it is in all the world; and ⁱbringeth forth fruit, as it doth also in you, since the day ye heard ^jof it, and knew ^kthe grace of God in truth: ⁷ as ye also learned of ^lEpaphras our dear fellow-servant, who is for you ^ma faithful minister of Christ; ⁸ who also declared unto us your ⁿlove in the Spirit. ⁹ For ^othis cause we also, since the day we heard it, do not cease to pray for you, and to desire ^pthat ye might be filled with ^qthe knowledge of his will, ^rin all wisdom and spiritual understanding; ¹⁰ that ^s[ye] might walk worthy of the Lord ^tunto all pleasing, ^ubeing fruitful in every good work, and increasing in the knowledge of God; ¹¹ strengthened ^vwith all might, according to his glorious power, ^wunto all patience and long-suffering ^xwith joyfulness; ¹² giving ^ythanks unto the Father, which hath made us meet to be partakers of ^zthe inheritance of the saints in light; ¹³ who hath delivered us from ^athe power of darkness, ^band hath translated us into the kingdom of ^chis dear Son; ¹⁴ in ^dwhom we have redemption [through his blood], even the forgiveness of sins.

To prove to them the efficacy of Christ's death in obtaining pardon for the sins of man, the Apostle describes the divinity and supereminent dignity of Christ, who was the image or counterpart of the invisible God; the Creator and Cause of all things that had a beginning, visible and invisible; who created every thing both by and for himself; he existed before the creation of all created things; and must have been therefore the true and self-existing God; and as his power created all things, so does it also preserve them—For as from him all being was derived, so also by him must it subsist, and he is the Head of the Church, which he considers his spiritual body—By his incarnation he is the first cause or beginning of the Church, and the first who rose from the dead in a glorified human form, that in all things, both in his divine and human nature, he may have the preëminence—For it pleased the Father that in him all the majesty, power, and mercy of the Godhead should be made manifest, or dwell, and having by the blood of his cross made peace between God and man, and by this means broken down the wall of partition between Jews and Gentiles, he has reconciled them to himself, with all things in heaven and earth, whether they be men or angels, forming them into one holy and spiritual society—And the Gentiles, who were once alienated from God, and by their works proved the enmity of their minds towards him, he hath so reconciled through the death of his human body, that he may present them holy and blameless, free from all accusation in his sight, at the day of judgment, which he will surely do if they continue grounded in the faith of Jesus Christ, and settled in his doctrines; not moved away by false teachers from the blessed hopes and promises of the Gospel, which has been preached both to Jew and Gentile, of which St. Paul was appointed a minister.

¹⁵ Who is ^athe Image of the invisible God, ^bthe Firstborn of every creature; ¹⁶(for ^cby Him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or ^ddominions, or principalities, or powers; all things were created ^eby Him, and for Him;) ¹⁷and ^fhe is before all things, and by Him all things consist; ¹⁸and ^gHe is the head of the Body (the Church); who is the Beginning, ^hthe Firstborn from the dead; that ⁱin all things He might have the preëminence;—¹⁹for it pleased the Father that ^jin Him should all fulness dwell; ²⁰and, ^khaving ^lmade peace through the blood of his cross, ^mby Him to reconcile ⁿall things unto Himself; by Him, I say, whether they be things in earth, or things in heaven.

St. Paul, as the minister of Christ to the Gentiles, assures them that he rejoices in his sufferings, according to the dispensation of the Gospel, which God gave to him for their benefit; that he might accomplish the purpose of God, as predicted by his prophets—Even the mystery of redemption through faith to the Gentiles, which has been hid for many generations, but is now made fully manifest; which is Christ dwelling in them, giving through his blood pardon for sins, and through his Spirit the hope of their glorification—Whom the apostles preach, warning all men of their sin and danger, and instructing them in all spiritual wisdom—For which end he labors, striving with all his might—As a proof of which, he wishes them to know the persecutions and sufferings to which he has been exposed for preaching the Gospel to the Gentile Church, to all the believing Gentiles—That knit together in love, and in the full assurance of the riches of Christianity, they may acknowledge the mystery of God through Christ, in the salvation of both Jews and Gentiles, in whom and in his Gospel are hid all the treasures of divine wisdom and knowledge—And he says this, that no man might deceive them with the sophistry or enticing words of human philosophy, for though in the body he was absent, yet through the Spirit he was with them, rejoicing, and beholding their regular order and discipline, and their steadfast faith—He encourages them, since they had embraced the Gospel of Christ, to persevere in his faith, that they might be rooted in him, building upon him all their hopes of pardon and salvation, and that, being established in the purity of his faith, as they had been instructed in it, they might abound more and more in its fruits, with thanksgiving to God for having called them to be partakers of its blessings.

²⁴ Who ^anow rejoice in my sufferings ^bfor you, and fill up ^cthat which is behind of the afflictions of Christ in my flesh for ^dhis body's sake, which is the Church: ²⁵whereof I am made a minister, according to ^ethe dispensation of God which is given to me for you; ^fto fulfil the word of God; ²⁶even ^gthe mystery which hath been hid from ages and from generations, ^hbut now is made manifest to his saints: ²⁷to ⁱwhom God would make known what is ^jthe riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles; which is Christ in you,^j the hope of glory: ²⁸ whom we preach, warning every man, and teaching every man in all wisdom; ^l that we may present every man perfect in Christ [Jesus;] ²⁹ whereunto ^m I also labor, ⁿ striving ^o according to his working, which worketh in me mightily.

Chap. ii. 1-7.

¹ For I would that ye knew what ^p great ^q conflict I have for you, and for them at Laodicea, and for as many as have not seen my face in the flesh; ² that ^r their hearts might be comforted, ^s being knit together in love, and unto all riches of the full assurance of understanding, ^t to the acknowledgment of the mystery of God, and of the Father, and of Christ; ³ ^u in ^v whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge. ⁴ And this I say, ^w lest any man should beguile you with enticing words. ⁵ For ^x though I be absent in the flesh, yet am I with you in the spirit, joying and beholding ^y your order, and the ^z steadfastness of your faith in Christ. ⁶ As ^a ye have therefore received Christ Jesus the Lord, so walk ye in him: ⁷ rooted ^b and built up in him, and stablished in the faith, as ye have been taught, abounding therein with thanksgiving.

§ 4.—chap. ii. 8-15.

The Apostle cautions them against the Judaizing teachers, who inculcate the worship of angels, and the abstinence from animal food, which things are according to the traditions of men, and the first elements of religion given in the Mosaic Law; for their salvation is made complete in him, who is the supreme Head and Governor of all created things, of whatsoever rank—In whom, (and not to the angels,) they are also circumcised, and enabled by the operations of the Holy Spirit, to renounce all the deeds of the sinful flesh—which is pointed out to them by that ordinance, which may be considered as the circumcision required by Christ in the Gospel, in which they are buried to sin under the water, as Christ was buried on account of sin under the earth, and have been raised with him out of the water unto a spiritual life, through the faith of the wonderful power of God, who also raised Christ to eternal life from the grave of death—And the Gentiles also, who were dead in sins, and in the uncircumcision of the flesh, has God made alive together with him through his Spirit, unto eternal life, blotting out the handwriting of ordinances, which was against both Jew and Gentile, and contrary to their salvation, as it subjected them all to the curse of eternal death for sin; and having despoiled the rulers and delegated powers of darkness of their dominion, he made a display of his conquest openly, by triumphing over their power in his glorious resurrection from the grave.

⁸ BEWARE ^c lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after ^d the tradition of men, after ^e the ^f rudiments of the world, and not after Christ. ⁹ For ^g in Him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily; ¹⁰ and ^h ye are complete in Him, ⁱ which is the Head of all ^j principality and power; ¹¹ in whom also ye are ^k circumcised with the circumcision made without hands, in ^l putting off the body [of the sins] of the flesh by the circumcision of Christ, ¹² buried ^m with him in baptism; wherein also ⁿ ye are risen with him through ^o the faith of the operation of God, ^p who hath raised him from the dead: ¹³ and ^q you, being dead in your sins and the uncircumcision of your flesh, hath He quickened together with him, having forgiven you all trespasses; ¹⁴ blotting ^r out the handwriting of ordinances^s that was against us, which was contrary to us, and took it out of the way, nailing it to his cross; ¹⁵ and ^t having spoiled ^u principalities and powers, he made a show of them openly, triumphing over them ^v in it.

From the consideration that mankind are delivered from the power of sin and eternal death by Christ alone—The Apostle exhorts them not to allow any one to condemn them as it concerns the distinctions between meats and drinks in the Mosaic Law, or in respect of its festivals and Sabbaths—Which observances were only the types or

§ 6.—chap. ii. 20, to the end.

The Apostle, as they have in the body of Christ suffered the punishment of the Law for sin, and are thereby delivered, or become dead to its power, inquires of them why they subjected themselves to ordinances taught by the authority and doctrines of men; as if they were living under that dispensation from which by the death of Christ they had been made free—The abstinences prescribed by the doctrines of their philosophers and by their Judaizing teachers—touch not, taste not, handle not—relate to indifferent things, which perish in the corruption of the body, for which they were made—which doctrines, however, have an appearance or display of wisdom, being a worship founded on the will of man, voluntarily performed, and a supposed act of humility, mortification, and severity.

The Apostle, having shown them that as they had been buried with Christ in the waters of baptism, in token that in the body of Christ they had fulfilled the curse of death, pronounced upon sin by the Law, and were thereby delivered from its power, now calls upon them, as they had been with Christ also figuratively raised from the waters of baptism, and become spiritually alive, to set their whole affections on heavenly things—For Christians are dead with Christ to sin, and to earthly things; and their spiritual life, which emanates from him, who is invisible, is, as it were, hidden with Christ in God—and when, at the end of time, he shall appear, who is the source of their heavenly life, Christians also shall appear with him in glory—in glorious and immortal bodies—Having this hope, St. Paul exhorts them to mortify their earthly members—to deprive the animal man of its strength and ascendancy, not yielding to its inordinate desires and passions, on account of which the wrath of God cometh on all; not only on those who profess his religion, but on the children of disobedience—the heathen world—whose lusts and vices they also habitually practised when they lived among them: but now, as their life is in Christ, derived from him through his Spirit, the Apostle exhorts them to put away these vices of their earthly members, and all others to which they had been addicted; and, as they had buried the old man in baptism, with all his corrupt affections and deeds, to put on the new man, which is re-made by God in spiritual knowledge and holiness, according to his image, in which man was first created—In this new spiritual creation there is no distinction of nation or of circumstance—but Christ is life to all—He is in all by his Spirit, and reigns over and governs all things.

He exhorts the Colossians, as those who were elected of God to the high privileges and blessings of the Gospel, to put on the spiritual character of the new man—to be pure and holy in the service of God, as his beloved children, practising all the Christian graces and dispositions, and over all these graces of the inward man, to put on love, which is the perfection of the Christian character, uniting in itself every virtue—Then will that divinely-imparted peace, to the enjoyment of which they are called, reign in their hearts, and, united in one body unto Christ, they will be thankful that they are become partakers of these glorious privileges—The Word of Christ, the Gospel, which they have received, will dwell in them, and they will constantly teach and admonish each other in all wisdom, singing with grace in their hearts unto the Lord in psalms, hymns, and songs, as the Spirit inspired them—They are exhorted, whatever they did—in all their conversation, and in every action of their lives—to do all in the name and for the glory of the Lord Jesus Christ, and to offer their praises and thanks to God the Father, in his name, and by his mediation, and not by that of angels.

¹²PUT ^aon therefore, ^bas the elect of God, holy and beloved, ^cbowels of mercies, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness, long-suffering; ¹³(forbearing ^done another, and forgiving one another, if any man have a ^equarrel against any: even as ^fChrist forgave you, so also do ye;) ¹⁴and above all these things, ^gput on charity, which is the ^hbond of perfectness; ¹⁵and let ⁱthe peace of God rule in your hearts, ^jto the which also ye are called ^kin one body; ^land be ye thankful.

¹⁶Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly; in all wisdom, teaching and admonishing one another ^min psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing ⁿwith grace in your hearts to the Lord; ¹⁷and ^owhatsoever ye do in word or deed, ^pdo all in the name of the Lord Jesus, ^qgiving thanks to God and the Father by him.

The Apostle, from general directions for their Christian conduct, proceeds to exhort them, on the same principles of love and obedience to Christ, to the performance of the relative duties of life. (See Eph. v. 22, 23, and vi. 1-9.)

¹⁸WIVES, ^asubmit yourselves unto your [own] husbands, ^bas it is fit in the Lord. ¹⁹Husbands, ^clove your wives, and be not ^dbitter against them.—²⁰Children, ^eobey your parents in all things: for this is well pleasing unto the Lord. ²¹Fathers, ^fprovoke not your children to anger, lest they be discouraged.—²²Servants, ^gobey ^hin all things your masters ⁱaccording to the flesh; not with eyeservice, as men-pleasers; but in singleness of heart, fearing God: ²³and ^jwhatsoever ye do, do it heartily, as to the Lord, and not unto men; ²⁴knowing ^kthat of the Lord ye shall receive the reward of the inheritance: ^lfor ye serve the

The Apostle commands all, in their different relations and stations in life, that they may be enabled to fulfil their respective duties, to persevere in earnest prayer to God, guarding against negligence and inattention, and, with thanksgiving, to acknowledge the blessings they had received—Praying also for the apostles, that God would open for them an opportunity of preaching the mystery of the Gospel of Christ, the calling of the Gentiles through faith—for which very account he was now in bonds—that he may more effectually make this mystery manifest, and that he may have courage to speak as becomes his apostleship—He admonishes them to behave with prudence and discretion to those who are without the pale of the Christian Church (the unbelieving Gentiles and persecuting Jews), avoiding persecutions, and steadily improving every present moment—Their conversation is to be holy and courteous, seasoned with the salt of cheerfulness and spiritual wisdom, resisting the corruption of sin, that they may know how to answer both Jew and Gentile to their edification, and to their own security.

St. Paul sends Tychicus to relate to them in a more particular manner his situation and circumstances at Rome (See Eph. vi. 21.), with Onesimus, who would also give them every satisfactory information—He presents the salutations of the brethren who were with him by name, and desires them to receive Marcus with all respect and affection, and Justus (compare Acts xv. 38, 39. and 2 Tim. iv. 11.) ; for these only of the circumcision had been his fellow-laborers in preaching the Gospel in sincerity at Rome, and who had been a consolation to him (compare Phil. i. 14-18.)—All the Gentile teachers with St. Paul at Rome join in salutations—(Timothy joined in writing the letter)—He particularly mentions Epaphras, their faithful minister, as always striving in prayer for them with God—He desires them to salute in his name the Christians in Laodicea, with Nymphas, and the church that is in his house—and, after this Epistle had been publicly read among them, to take care that it shall be also read in the Church of the Laodiceans, and that the Epistle from Laodicea, which is supposed to have been the Epistle to the Ephesians, shall be read in their own Church—He encourages Archippus (officiating, perhaps, in the absence of Epaphras) in the work of the ministry committed to him, and then authenticates the Epistle by writing the salutation in his own hand—(1 Cor. xvi. 21. and 2 Thess. iii. 17.)—He concludes with the apostolic benediction.

SECTION XIII.—St. Paul writes his Epistle to his friend Philemon,^a to intercede with him in favor of his slave Onesimus, who had fled from the Service of his Master to Rome, in which City he had been converted to Christianity by means of the Apostle's Ministry.

THE EPISTLE TO PHILEMON.

§ 1.—verse 1-7.

St. Paul, writing on a matter of private business, addresses Philemon as a friend, and not in the capacity and authority of an apostle—Timothy unites in the salutation to Philemon—to the beloved Apphia—to Archippus (Coloss. iv. 17.), and to the Church at his house—His benediction—He tells Philemon that he thanked God always in his prayers for the increase of his faith towards Jesus Christ, and his love towards the Christian brethren; and he prays also that the communication of his liberality, which is the fruit of much faith, may be efficacious in bringing others to the knowledge of every good disposition that is in him in Christ Jesus—for they themselves have much joy and consolation in his love, more particularly on account of the poor saints who were driven from their homes in the name of Christ, and went about preaching the Gospel, whom the riches of Philemon had relieved.

⁴ I ^gthank my God, making mention of thee always in my prayers, ⁵ hearing ^hof thy love and faith, which thou hast toward the Lord Jesus, and toward all saints; ⁶ that the communication of thy faith may become effectual ⁱby the acknowledging of every good thing which is in you in Christ Jesus. ⁷ For we have great joy and consolation in thy love, because the bowels of the saints ^jare refreshed by thee, brother.

§ 2.—verse 8, to the end.

St. Paul declares, on account of the love he bore to Philemon for his benevolent and kind exertions, that though, as an apostle of Christ, he might have commanded him to do what was fit in the affair he was about to mention, yet he prefers beseeching him, by his own love for him, and by that which he has shown to the saints, for his son Onesimus, whom he has begotten to a spiritual creation, and has sent back again at his own desire—"Do thou therefore," St. Paul entreats, "receive him into thy family, who is, as it were, my own bowels, my son, a part of myself—whom, being so useful to me, I would have detained with me, that he might have ministered to me, thy spiritual father, in my bonds for the Gospel; and performed those offices which thou wouldst have done, if thou hadst been at Rome—but without knowing thy mind on the subject, I would not keep him with me, that the benefit conferred on me in pardoning him, should not be from necessity, but from thine own goodwill—For he departed for a season, that by the providence of God he may be restored to thee for ever: not now as a servant, but as a beloved brother in the Lord, and more particularly dear to me, but how much more to thee, as being thy property, and a part of thy family; and now being made a member of thy heavenly family, the Church of thy house—If thou consider me a partner of thy affection, receive him as myself, as he is, as it were, a part of me, and in receiving him thou receivest me—If he have wronged, or owe thee aught, place it all to my account: I will discharge all he owes thee; and I promise to repay thee in mine own hand, as I do not

SECT. XIV.

V. Æ. 62.

J. P. 4775.

Jerusalem.

a See Note 21.

SECTION XIV.—St. James writes his Epistle^a to the Jewish Christians in general, to caution them against the prevalent Evils of the Day—to rectify the Errors into which many had fallen by misinterpreting St. Paul's Doctrine of Justification, and to enforce various Duties.

THE GENERAL EPISTLE OF JAMES.

§ 1.—chap. i. 1–12.

James addresses the Twelve Tribes, particularly the Jewish Christians, in their state of dispersion, wishing them all health and prosperity—As the unbelieving Jews desired to persuade their converted brethren, by applying to them the rewards and punishments annexed to their obedience or disobedience to the Mosaic Law, that their present afflictions were tokens of the divine displeasure—the Apostle shows the advantages resulting from afflictions, to produce in them patience and resignation to God's will—He exhorts them to patience, that they may, in allusion to the sacrifices of the Law, be perfect—If any under trials be deficient in this wisdom of patience, he is to ask it of God, who giveth all necessary good to every man, and who reproaches none for asking, and it shall be given to him—But then let him ask in a steady faith, fully persuaded that God is both able and willing to grant his petitions, not irresolute, nor divided in his own mind concerning the things for which he prays—for he who thus wavers between virtue and vice is like a wave of the sea, influenced by every succeeding impulse, and cannot expect to receive from God what he desires—A man of two minds is unstable in all his actions, and can attain to no degree of excellence—The poor converted Jew is encouraged to rejoice in his sufferings, for by them his Christian character, through faith, is exalted—but the rich man, to be ashamed of the emptiness and uncertainty of those things in which he delights and rather glory in his humiliation and sufferings for the sake of the Gospel—for his own life, and all his earthly possessions, are as transient, and as little to be depended on, as the flower of the field—and those whose happiness consists in them are subjected in a similar manner by diseases, and the vicissitudes of life, to be cut down, and wither in the midst of their glory—The man is blessed who stands in his temptation—for when his trials in this world are over, he shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love him, and suffer for him.

⁵ If ^hany of you lack wisdom, ⁱlet him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and ^jit shall be given him. ⁶ But ^klet him ask in faith, nothing wavering; for he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed. ⁷ For let not that man think that he shall receive any thing of the Lord. ⁸ A ^ldouble-minded ^mman is unstable in all his ways.

⁹ Let the brother of low degree ⁿrejoice in that he is exalted, ¹⁰ but the rich, in that he is made low; because ^oas the flower of the grass he shall pass away. ¹¹ For the sun is no sooner risen with a burning heat, but it withereth the grass, and the flower thereof falleth, and the grace of the fashion of it perisheth: so also shall the rich man fade away in his ways. ¹² Blessed ^pis the man that endureth temptation: for when he is tried, he shall receive ^qthe crown of life, ^rwhich the Lord hath promised to them that love him.

The Apostle, fearing his expressions relating to temptations or afflictions, sent by God as a trial of the virtue and faith of Christians, should be misinterpreted, condemns, in its other sense, that impious notion, which some of the unbelieving Jews and their Judaizing teachers held, as a vindication of their grossest actions, that God tempts men to sin—He forbids any man to say, he is tempted or solicited to sin by God; for God, who is all holiness, is incapable of being seduced by evil, neither can he thus tempt any man—But every man is tempted to sin when he is allured by his own lusts, and enticed by his own impure desires; then lust having tempted the sinner to its embraces, bringeth forth actual sin; committing the evil purposes—and sin, when habitually confirmed, bringeth forth eternal death—They must not suppose therefore, that God is the author of sin, or impels man to it—For God, instead of being the author of sin, is the author of every good and perfect gift—God of his own will had created those who were Jews anew, in the Gospel of truth and holiness, that they might become the firstfruits of all his creatures who should be converted.

¹³ LET no man say when he is tempted, I am tempted of God: for God cannot be tempted with ^sevil, neither tempteth he any man: ¹⁴ but every man is tempted, when he is drawn away of his own lust, and enticed. ¹⁵ Then ^twhen lust hath ^uconceived, it bringeth forth sin: and sin, when it is finished, ^vbringeth forth death.

To reprove the converted Jews, who were emulous of becoming teachers, and who were intemperate in their religious zeal, the Apostle exhorts those who are thus begotten of God in the Gospel of his Son, to be anxious and diligent to hear its doctrines, as laid down by the apostles, and slow to speak concerning the truth, waiting till they understand it ; and slow to wrath, not easily incensed—for the wrath, or the fierce contentions of men, on religious differences, do not promote the interests of the kingdom of heaven, do not work out in others the faith which God counts for righteousness—He calls upon them to put away all the filthiness of fleshly lusts, and vicious superfluity of words, and of anger, and receive with all meekness and gentleness the Gospel, which is engrafted on their own Law, and which is the means of saving their souls to eternal life—In opposition to the prevailing opinion of the Jews, who placed so much dependence on their knowledge of the Law, and on their regular attendance on the synagogue to hear the Law read, he exhorts them to be doers of the precepts of the Gospel, and not hearers of its word only—He who restraineth not his tongue, deceiving himself with the notion that his freedom from deeper vices will excuse him before God, and that railing against those who differ from him in religious opinions is acceptable to God, this man's religion is false—Pure religion consists in good works, and spiritual principles.

The administration of justice being in a most corrupt state at this time among the Jews, the Apostle reproves them for showing, as they were accustomed to do, partiality in the causes on which they were called upon to pass judgment—He cautions those who make profession of the faith or religion of our Lord, against making a distinction of persons on account of their rank, or other external circumstances, inwardly favoring one more than the other—This, he declares, is contrary to the Gospel of Christ, who hath chosen the poor of this world to be rich in all spiritual blessings, and has made them heirs of his eternal kingdom ; but that they have despised the poor man, although God has so enriched him, while by the rich they are oppressed, and dragged before their tribunals of justice, to be maltreated and punished for their faith, while they blaspheme the name by which they are called—But, if they fulfil the royal Law of Christ, according to the Scriptures (John xiii. 34. xv. 12.), they shall do well, and shall be guilty of no partiality—But if they have respect to persons in their judgment, they commit sin against God, and their brethren, and they are convicted as transgressors of the Law—For he who offends in one particular point, he who kills by his iniquitous judgment, is guilty of all, for every precept is enjoined by the same authority—In giving judgment, then, they are so to speak and act, as those who shall be judged by the Law of liberty, which prescribes for them a rule of life, and frees them from the guilt, power, and dominion of sin, teaching them, that, at the last day, judgment will be passed upon them according to the strictness of the Law, who have showed no mercy, but rather unjustly condemned ; but that the mercy of God will triumph over judgment, to those who have showed mercy.

poor of this world, ^arich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom ^ewhich he hath promised to them that love him? ⁶but ^fye have despised the poor. Do not rich men oppress you, ^gand draw you before the judgment-seats? ⁷Do not they blaspheme that worthy Name by the which ye are called? ⁸If ye fulfil the royal Law according to the ^hScripture, "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself," ye do well: ⁹but ⁱif ye have respect to persons, ye commit sin, and are ^jconvinced of the Law as transgressors. ¹⁰For whosoever shall keep the whole Law, and yet offend in one point, ^khe is guilty of ^lall. ¹¹For ^mHe that ⁿsaid, "Do not commit adultery," said also, "Do not kill:" now if thou commit no adultery, yet if thou kill, thou art become a transgressor of the Law. ¹²So speak ye, and so do, as they that shall be judged by ^othe Law of liberty. ¹³For ^phe shall have judgment without mercy, that hath showed no mercy; and ^qmercy rejoiceth against judgment.

§ 5.—chap. ii. 14, to the end.

To show the Jews the absurdity of relying on the knowledge or the profession of the Gospel, without performing its precepts, as taught by some of their teachers, he asks what advantage it is to a man to say he hath faith, and not works, or no Christian practice?—An empty profession of faith is as ineffectual for justification, as good wishes without good works are for relieving the wants of the destitute—The devils believe in God, but not to their justification; for this conviction only increases their torment: they believe and tremble—But wouldst thou be convinced, the Apostle demands, that faith which has no influence on a man's actions is dead, utterly incapable of obtaining justification, ask thyself if our father Abraham was not justified by his works, when he offered Isaac on the altar—his faith coöperated with his works—and by his works, in obedience to the commands of God, his faith was manifested, and made perfect—By works, therefore, proceeding from faith, a man is justified; and not by faith only, without works; for there can be no more a true and saving faith without good works, than there can be a living human body without the soul.

¹⁴WHAT ^adoth it profit, my brethren, though a man say he hath faith, and have not works? can faith save him? ¹⁵If ^ba brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, ¹⁶and ^cone of you say unto them, Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled; notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit? ¹⁷Even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being ^dalone.

¹⁸Yea, a man may say, Thou hast faith, and I have works:—Show me thy faith ^ewithout thy works, ^fand I will show thee my faith by my works. ¹⁹Thou believest that there is one God: thou doest well: ^gthe devils also believe, and tremble. ²⁰But wilt thou know, O vain man! that faith without works is dead? ²¹Was not Abraham our father justified by works, ^hwhen he had offered Isaac his son upon the altar? ²²†Seest thou ⁱhow faith wrought with his works, and by works was faith made perfect? ²³and the ^jScripture was fulfilled which saith, "Abraham believed God, and it was imputed unto him for righteousness:" and he was called "The ^kFriend of God."

²⁴Ye see then how that by works a man is justified, and not by faith only. ²⁵Likewise also ^lwas not Rahab the harlot justified by works, when she had received the messengers, and had sent them out another way? ²⁶For as the body without the ^mspirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also.

§ 6.—chap. iii. 1–12.

St. James again cautions the Christian Jews not to undertake the office of teacher, of which they were very desirous (1 Tim. i. 7.), before they were fully qualified, knowing that as teachers they would receive the greater condemnation; for in many things they offend all—If a man offend not in word, by false doctrine, or bitter railing, the same is a man well instructed in the Gospel, and is able also to bridle in the whole body—as it is more difficult to govern our tongues, than to avoid offending in our actions—By bits in horses' mouths the whole body is turned round—ships, which though they be so great, are governed with a very small helm—even so the tongue is a little member, boasting great things, working mightily, and ruling over the whole man—Behold also how great a mass of wood a little fire kindleth—And the tongue is a fire kindling a mass of iniquity—So is the tongue among our members defiling our bodies with its iniquity; speaking ill of God and man; setting on fire the wheel or frame of our nature; or the successive generations of man; being itself set on fire of hell, by the infernal spirit influencing the heart—Every nature of wild beasts, their strength and fierceness, the swiftness of birds, the poison of serpents, the exceeding great force of sea monsters, is tamed, and hath been tamed, by the reason and ingenuity of man; but the tongue of man can no man tame—It is an unruly evil thing: and like the tongue of a serpent or adder, it is full of deadly venom (Psalm cxl. 3.)—It is applied to the most opposite purposes—With it we bless God, even the Father of us all; and with it we curse men, who are made after the similitude of God—From the same tongue, out of the same mouth, goeth both a blessing and a curse—Such inconsistency is not to be found in the natural world, where it would be considered contradictory and unnatural.

Behold, how great ⁱa matter a little fire kindleth! ⁶And ^jthe tongue is a fire, a world of iniquity! So is the tongue among our members, that ^kit defileth the whole body, and setteth on fire the ^lcourse of nature, and it is set on fire of hell. ⁷For every ^mkind of beasts, and of birds, and of serpents, and of things in the sea, is tamed, and hath been tamed of ⁿmankind: ⁸but the tongue can no man tame: it is an unruly evil, ^ofull of deadly poison! ⁹Therewith bless we God, even the Father: and therewith curse we men, which are made after the similitude of God: ¹⁰out of the same mouth proceedeth blessing and cursing. My brethren, these things ought not so to be. ¹¹Doth a fountain send forth at the same ^pplace sweet water and bitter? ¹²Can the fig-tree, my brethren, bear olive-berries? either a vine, figs? so can no fountain both yield salt water and fresh.

The Apostle exhorts the Jews, who were great pretenders to knowledge, particularly those who were teachers, to give proof of their wisdom by a holy life and conversation; in all their actions showing the meekness and gentleness of true religion—But if they taught either the Law or the Gospel with bitter zeal against their opponents, they should not boast of their religious knowledge, for they lied against that truth which they pretended to teach—For this wisdom originates in the gratification of the earthly man and his sensual passions, and is the wisdom of devils: for where there is fiery and intolerant zeal and animosity, there is confusion and disorder, irregularity, and every unchristian practice—But the wisdom which Christ himself, or the Spirit, brought down from above, is first pure from sensuality and earthliness, gentle and peaceable, (not contentious,) easy to be entreated to forgiveness, full of compassion to the afflicted, abounding in the good fruits of holiness and righteousness, without partiality in judgment, and without dissimulation and hypocrisy: for all the opposite vices of which the Jews had been reproved—And this excellent and heavenly temper and wisdom, the fruit of the Christian religion, is sown, not in strife and contention, but in peace and concord, by those who practise and promote peace among mankind.

easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, †without partiality, and without hypocrisy. ¹⁸ And ^jthe fruit of righteousness is sown in peace of them that make peace.

§ 8.—chap. iv. 1–10.

The Apostle, after having described the effects of that wisdom which is from above, insinuates that their furious zeal could not, as they asserted, proceed from the Spirit of God, whose fruit was peace and harmony, but from that wisdom which is from beneath—the cause of all their wars and fightings proceeding from their own sensual appetites and passions, which war in their members against their knowledge and conscience—They lust for dominion over the heathen, and freedom from tribute, but their sensual desires are not gratified—They kill the heathen in their zeal to destroy idolatry, but they cannot obtain this object of their earnest desire—They fight and war for dominion over them, yet their attempts are unsuccessful, because they do not ask if it is the will of God—And when they pray, they do not receive the things for which they petition, because they ask them for wicked purposes—They have broken their marriage contract with God, for loving the world more than him—And know they not that the inordinate love of the present world is open enmity against God?—Do they think that the Scripture falsely condemns such a worldly temper (Rom. viii. 7.), that the Spirit of God, from which the true wisdom proceeds, produces envy, covetousness, and worldly-mindedness?—By no means; for his Spirit gives greater degrees of grace, imparting humility and love to man, and moderation as to earthly things, according to the words of Scripture (Prov. iii. 34. Sept.)—They are called upon to submit to the dispensations and the will of God, to resist the great enemy of their salvation, the author of their wars and strifes—He will flee from them if they are holy in their conduct—To draw nigh to God with pure, humble, and devout affections.

¹ FROM whence come wars and *fightings among you? come they not hence, even of your †lusts “that war in your members? ² Ye lust, and have not: ye †kill, and desire to have, and cannot obtain: ye fight and war, yet ye have not, because ye ask not: ³ ye †ask, and receive not, “because ye ask amiss, that ye may consume it upon your *lusts. ⁴ Ye ^dadulterers and adulteresses! know ye not that “the friendship of the world is enmity with God? “whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world is [constituted] the enemy of God. ⁵ Do ye think that the Scripture “saith in vain, “The spirit that dwelleth in us lusteth †to envy?” ⁶ But He giveth more grace; wherefore He ^hsaith,— “God resisteth the proud,

But giveth grace unto the humble.”

⁷ Submit yourselves therefore to God: “resist the Devil, and he will flee from you. ⁸ Draw ^jnigh to God, and he will draw nigh to you. ^kCleanse your hands, ye sinners! and “purify your hearts, ye ^mdouble-minded! ⁹ Be “afflicted, and mourn, and weep: let your laughter be turned to mourning, and your joy to heaviness. ¹⁰ Humble ^oyourselves in the sight of the Lord, and he shall lift you up.

§ 9.—chap. iv. 11, 12.

The Apostle cautions them against all detraction, more particularly the zealous Jewish converts, against censuring and speaking evil of those who differ from them in religious opinions, and who thought themselves released from all obligation to the ceremonial Law: for those who condemn others for asserting their Christian liberty, speak in effect against the Christian law (Lev. xix. 16. Ps. xv. 3. Matt. vii. 1. Luke vi. 37.)

¹¹ SPEAK “not evil one of another, brethren. § 11.—chap. v. 1-6.

The Apostle having reminded the Jews of the uncertainty of this life, and of their precarious success in worldly pursuits, more particularly addresses himself to the unbelieving part of the nation, who were extremely addicted to covetousness, and to the amassing of wealth, and represents to them, with the spirit and energy of a prophet, the dreadful desolation and calamities that were coming upon them, and to show the folly of trusting in these things which they must so soon lose—When the awful judgments of God pronounced against their nation shall be poured out, they will be plundered of their illgotten wealth—The cry of the laborers they have defrauded (Deut. xxiv. 14. Lev. xix. 13.) has ascended into heaven, requiring vengeance from the Deity—They have lived in the full indulgence of all their sensual appetites—They have pampered their hearts as beasts are fed for a day of slaughter—They have condemned and killed the Just One, and God has not as yet resisted them.

§ 12.—chap. v. 7-12.

From the consideration that the unbelieving Jews had not as yet received the punishment which must necessarily follow on their unparalleled crimes, the Jewish Christians, who are persecuted by them, are exhorted, in imitation of their blessed Master, to await with patience the coming of the Lord, who will execute judgment on their nation, and provide the means of their deliverance—He desires them not to groan or to pray for vengeance against their persecutors, lest they also be condemned with them, for Christ has alone the power of judging, and is about to execute it on the disobedient—Further to encourage them in faith and patience, St. James calls upon them to take the Prophets who had spoken to their fathers, by the authority of God, for their example of suffering affliction, and patience.

Under all the circumstances of life he recommends a correspondent feeling of devotion—In sickness and disease to send for the elders of the Church, who possessed the gifts of healing, to pray over and to anoint them with oil, as the Jewish custom was, in the hope that, by a sincere repentance, their sin might be pardoned, and their disorder miraculously removed—The prayer of faith prevailing, the Lord Jesus will raise them up again in health, manifesting, by a sudden restoration, that the sins, for which they had been afflicted, were forgiven—They are admonished to confess their faults one to another, that they may obtain the pardon and the prayers of those they have injured—The prayer of a righteous man, endued with the gift of healing (probably by the elder, ver. 14.), moved by the Spirit of God, is of great efficacy, and availeth much with God for the recovery of the sick—Further, to excite them to fervent prayer, and to increase their confidence and faith in the miraculous interference of God, when for his glory, he adduces the instance of Elijah, who was a man of the same constitution and infirmities as themselves, and equally incapable of performing a miracle ; yet when he twice prayed with faith and fervency, in obedience to a secret impulse, God heard his prayer, and in both instances remarkably answered them—The gifts of healing and of performing miracles are much to be desired ; but he who reclains a sinner from the error of his way, shall produce a more highly acceptable work than any miraculous cure performed on the body ; for he shall save a soul from everlasting death, and shall cover a multitude of sins, God not inflicting punishment on those who have repented of their sins, and are turned to him.

¹³ Is any among you afflicted ? let him pray. Is any merry ? ^a let him sing psalms. ¹⁴ Is any sick among you ? let him call for the elders of the Church ; and let them pray over him, ^b anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord. ¹⁵ And the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up ; and if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven ^c him. ¹⁶ Confess your faults one to another, and pray one for another, that ye may be healed : ^d the effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much. ¹⁷ Elias was a man ^e subject to like passions as we are, and ^f he prayed ^g earnestly that it might not rain ; ^h and it rained not on the earth by the space of three years and six months : ¹⁸ and ⁱ he prayed again, and the heaven gave rain, and the earth brought forth her fruit.

SECTION I.—St. Paul, while waiting in Italy for Timothy, writes the Key to the Old Testament, the Epistle to the Hebrews,^a to prove to the Jews, from their own Scriptures, the Humanity, Divinity, Atonement, and Intercession of Christ, the Superiority of the Gospel to the Law, and the real Object and Design of the Mosaic Institutions.

THE EPISTLE TO THE HEBREWS.

The Apostle begins by asserting, that the Jewish and Christian revelations were given by the same God, and infers, therefore, that they must agree together, and explain each other—The superiority of the Gospel is asserted, being given by the promised Son of God, the appointed heir of all things—Who, being the manifested Glory, and incarnated Representation of the invisible Father Almighty, and sustaining the universe by his power, having made an atoning sacrifice of himself for the sins of men, had returned in his human nature to that majesty with the Father which was essential to his divine nature before the world was made.

§ 2.—chap. i. 4, to the end.

To prove his proposition (the preëminence of Christ above all created beings), St. Paul asserts the divine character of the Son of God as distinct from, and superior to, the nature of the angels—His name is greater than theirs by inheritance, or natural right (Ps. ii. 7.)—He is an object of worship to angels (Ps. xcvii. 7.), who are his spiritual ministers and servants (Ps. civ. 4.)—His government extends over both worlds, and exists for ever; and for his love of righteousness, shown by his incarnation and death, he is anointed in his human nature with the gifts of the Holy Spirit, above all the prophets, priests, and kings who had preceded him, uniting the three offices in his own person—Still further to prove the superiority of Christ, and to remove the error that angels assisted in the formation of the world, he affirms in the words of David (Ps. cii. 25–27.), that Christ created both the heavens and earth; that these shall be done away with by him, and exchanged for new heavens and a new earth, but he shall remain unchangeable, and essentially the same to all eternity—Christ is greater than the angels, for to none of them has the Father himself given the character of Son (Ps. ii. 7.) and universal dominion: they are ministering spirits, subjected to him, and employed by him for the benefit of mankind.

hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool ? ” ¹⁴ Are ^l they not all of salvation ?

§ 3.—chap. ii. 1-5.

In application of the preceding argument, St. Paul shows the necessity of the utmost attention and obedience to the Gospel of Christ—He infers from the punishments inflicted on the apostate Israelites of old, the greater condemnation of the apostates from the Gospel, which offered greater hopes of salvation, and was first revealed by Christ himself, and was afterwards confirmed to mankind by the Apostles, who had received it from him, God bearing his own testimony to its truth by miracles, and the gifts of his Holy Spirit ; and this testimony is superior to that of angels : for the future world, which the Gospel promises, is not put in subjection to angels, but to Christ.

¹ THEREFORE we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we should ^{*} let them slip. ² For if the word ^a spoken by angels was steadfast, and ^b every transgression and disobedience received a just recompence of reward ; ³ how ^c shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation ! ^d which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was ^e confirmed unto us by them that heard him ; ⁴ God ^f also bearing them witness, ^g both with signs and wonders, and with divers miracles, ^h and ⁱ gifts of the Holy Ghost, ^j according to his own will.

The Apostle, in allusion to the objections entertained by the Jewish doctors against the divinity of Christ, proves, in the words of divine revelation (Ps. viii. 4-6.), that it had been predicted that he who was God should visit man, and be made lower than the angels, that all things might be subjected to him—At present all things are not subjected to him, wicked men and angels being unsubdued by his power ; but Jesus, in the form of man, has tasted death for every one, and has been crowned with glory and honor ; which are sufficient proofs that his power will finally prevail.

⁶ BUT one in a certain place testified, ^a saying,—

§ 5.—chap. ii. 10, to the end.

The Apostle shows the benefits accomplished by the incarnation and death of Christ—It was the means appointed by God for the redemption of man ; that both he who sanctifies, or makes atonement, and those who are sanctified, may be of one nature ; for which cause David (Ps. xxii. 22, 25.) has predicted he is not ashamed to call them brethren—By his incarnation his brethren are admitted, as Isaiah (chap. viii. 18.) has foretold, to a new relation to the same heavenly Father—The children whom Christ was to save being of a mortal nature, it became necessary that Christ, who was to die for them, should be of the same nature, and, as their representative, depose the Devil, who had the power of bringing in sin and death on all mankind, and deliver them from his bondage—For he took not hold of angels to redeem them, but he saved from destruction the seed of Abraham—It was expedient for Christ to be made like to his brethren, that he might be a faithful High Priest in things pertaining to God, enforcing his laws, worship, justice, and mercy ; and, at the same time, make an atonement for men ; delivering them from the evil and power of sin, and obtaining for them, through his blood, a heavenly inheritance ; and having himself endured the trials and sufferings of the human nature, he is more effectually able to succour those who are tempted, and to judge of its weaknesses and imperfections—The inference is, that his incarnation and death are no arguments for his inferiority to prophets or angels—he took upon him the nature of man, for man’s redemption, without any prejudice to his divinity.

§ 6.—chap. iii. 1–6.

The Apostle, after having proved the superiority of Christ to angels, now shows his superiority, as the Apostle and High Priest of the New Covenant, to Moses and Aaron, the apostles and high priests of the Old Covenant—Moses was faithful over the house of God, Num. xii. 7. (the Israelites of old), as teacher, lawgiver, and prophet ; bearing testimony in the types and ceremonies to Jesus Christ and his Gospel, who is entitled to more glory than Moses, because he was the Lord and Builder of that House, of which Moses was only servant—Christians are now the house and family of Christ, if they continue in his faith, as the obedient Jews were the disciples and house of Moses.

¹ WHEREFORE, holy brethren, partakers of ^athe heavenly calling, consider ^bthe Apostle and High Priest of our profession, [Christ] Jesus ; ²who was faithful to Him that ^{*}appointed him, as also ^cMoses was faithful in all his house. ³For This Man was counted worthy of more glory than Moses, inasmuch as ^dhe who hath builded the house hath more honor than the house. ⁴(For every house is builded by some man ; but ^ehe that built all things is God.) ⁵And ^fMoses verily was faithful in all his house, as ^ga servant, ^hfor a testimony of those things which were to be spoken after ; ⁶but Christ as ⁱa son over his own house : ^jwhose house are we, ^kif we hold fast the confidence and the rejoicing of the hope firm unto the end.

The Apostle applies this argument to the Hebrews, in the words of the Holy Ghost (Ps. xev. 7–11.) addressed by David to the Jews of his time—He then exhorts them to take care that there is not in them also an evil heart of unbelief, leading them to apostatize from the Gospel of Christ, and to exhort each other against the deceitfulness of sin, that they should not prefer Egypt to Canaan, the bondage of the world to the service of God (Num. xiv. 3, 4.)—Those only who are steadfast in the faith can be partakers of the blessings of the Gospel—The necessity of perseverance, and of immediate attention to it, is shown from the saying of the Holy Ghost, who calls upon them now by the Gospel, as he did the Israelites of old (Num. xiii. 26. and xiv. 1–31.), to enter into rest—There was a remnant then, as now, who believed, to whom the promises of God were fulfilled—Those who were disobedient and believed not, after repeated demonstrations of God's power, were for their infidelity excluded by an oath from the promised rest of Canaan (Joshua v. 6.) and perished in the wilderness (Num. xiv. 29.)—The Apostle here implies, that the natural seed of Abraham were heirs of his covenant only through faith.

⁷ WHEREFORE as ^athe Holy Ghost ^bsaith,—

“To-day, if ye will hear his voice,

⁸ Harden not your hearts, as in the provocation,
In the day of temptation in the wilderness ;

⁹ When your fathers tempted Me,
Proved Me, and saw my works forty years.

¹⁰ Wherefore I was grieved with that generation, and said,
They do alway err in their heart ;
And they have not known my ways.

¹¹ So I swear in my wrath,
They ^{*}shall not enter into my rest.”

¹² Take heed, brethren ! lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God ; ¹³but exhort one another daily, while it is called To-day, lest any of you be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin ; ¹⁴(for we are made partakers of Christ, ^cif we hold the beginning of our confidence steadfast unto the end ;) ¹⁵while it is ^dsaid, “To-day, if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts as in the provocation.” ¹⁶For ^esome, when they had heard, did provoke ? howbeit not all that came out of Egypt by Moses ? ¹⁷But with whom was He grieved forty years ? was it not with them that had sinned, ^fwhose carcasses fell in the wilderness ? ¹⁸And ^gto whom swore He that they should not enter into his rest, but to them that believed not ? ¹⁹So ^hwe see that they could not enter in because of unbelief.

§ 8.—chap. iv. 1–13.

The Apostle remarks on the typical signification of the rest of Canaan—From the consideration that the Israelites lost it through unbelief and obstinacy, he exhorts the Hebrews to fear, lest they should also fall short of the promise they had received—The same Gospel was preached to the Israelites as to them, by the types and shadows of the Law, and by the Prophets; but not being heard with faith, it did not profit them—That there is a rest for the faithful is evident from the words of Deut. xii. 9. and is predicted by David—That it is not the rest of God which followed the creation is certain, for the Sabbath rest was instituted (Gen. ii. 2. Exod. xxxi. 17.) immediately after the foundation of the world; and this oath was sworn long after, when the Israelites were in possession of the promised land, and with it of the Sabbath rest (Exod. xvi. 23. xx. 8.)—But they to whom this rest was first promised not having entered into it, because of unbelief, it was repeated again by the Holy Ghost many ages after—So, as Joshua had not given them the intended rest when he put them in possession of Canaan, there certainly remains to believers another rest of God, a heavenly rest, promised to the faithful (of which Canaan was the type,) not to be enjoyed in this life, but to be entered upon after its works have ceased, a Sabbath rest with God—They are admonished to use every exertion of body and mind to enter into the rest of God, and not, after the example of Israel of old, to fall short of it—He describes the word of God now preached to them as a living and all-powerful principle, taking vengeance, and more cutting than any two-edged sword, penetrating into the soul and spirit, irresistibly separating the accountable spirit from the sensitive soul of man, and searching the most secret thoughts of the heart—The omniscience of Christ, the Judge of man, to whom they must give account.

although the works were finished from the foundation of the world. ⁴ For He spake in a certain place of the seventh day on this ^awise, “And God did rest the seventh day from all his works.” ⁵ And in this place again, “If they shall enter into my rest.” ⁶ Seeing therefore it remaineth that some must enter therein, ^eand they to whom [†]it was first preached entered not in because of unbelief, ⁷ again, He limiteth a certain day, saying in David, “To-day, after so long a time; (as it is ^fsaid), To-day, if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts.” ⁸ For if ^{*}Jesus had given them rest, then would he not afterward have spoken of another day. ^c ⁹ There remaineth therefore a [†]rest to the people of God. ¹⁰ For he that is entered into his rest, he also hath ceased from his own works, as God did from his. ¹¹ Let us labor therefore to enter into that rest, lest any man fall ^eafter the same example of [†]unbelief. ¹² For the word of God is ^bquick, and powerful, and ⁱsharper than any ^jtwo-edged sword, ^d piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is ^ka discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart; ¹³ neither ^lis there any creature that is not manifest in his sight: but all things are naked ^mand opened unto the eyes of Him with whom we have to do.

The Apostle shows the superiority of the priesthood of Christ to that of Aaron and all other high priests, and, in allusion perhaps to the Jews, who encouraged the Hebrew Christians to apostatize, because the Gospel did not enjoin propitiatory sacrifices, he affirms that the High Priest of Christians is the Son of God, who has passed through the visible heavens with the sacrifice of himself, of which the Holy of Holies was a type—who, having taken the human into the divine nature, must ever feel for the infirmities of men, through whom all, instead of the high priest only, may approach the throne of grace, and, by the intercession of Christ, obtain seasonable assistance in the time of temptation.

§ 10.—chap. v. 1-10.

After having declared the benefits of the priesthood and sacrifice of the Son of God, he compares the priesthood of Christ with that of Aaron, showing that every high priest was taken from among his brethren (chap. ii. 17.) and was appointed to mediate between God and man, offering the gifts of the people in acknowledgment of God's bounty and providence, and the blood of animals as an atonement for sin ; who being of the same nature may compassionate the erring, and who for his own infirmities must offer a propitiatory sacrifice both for himself and the people—He connects this account of the offices of the priesthood by affirming, that as no man in the Jewish Church could take upon himself the dignity of a high priest, so Christ, the High Priest of the Christian Church, who possessed all the other qualifications, was also appointed to his office by God himself, who declared him to be his Son, as was evident from their own Scriptures (Ps. cx. 4. ii. 7.)—The Apostle asserts, that although Christ, the High Priest of the Gospel, was the Son of God, he was exposed in his human nature to the greatest and most agonizing sufferings, by which he learnt the difficulty men find in obedience under affliction ; and being made perfect as man by suffering, he became the Author of salvation to all who obey him in his crucified human nature, and was constituted by God a priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec.

The Apostle, in a parenthetical digression, reproves them for their slowness of apprehension in spiritual matters ; that, instead of being teachers of others, as they ought to be, they need themselves to be again instructed in the first elements of the oracles of God, the types and figures of the Old Testament, and are become such as require to be fed with milk, and not with strong meat—Those who know nothing but the letter of the ancient oracles (represented as milk, because they were the first rudiments of religion) are babes in ignorance and growth, and are unskilful in the doctrines of the Gospel, which, being concealed under the figures and prophecies of the Law, are called strong meat, because they belong only to spiritual adults, whose faith they strengthen, and who, by having their spiritual senses constantly exercised, are enabled to discern the deep meaning of the oracles of God, and to distinguish between truth and falsehood—The Apostle therefore exhorts them to leave the Law, or the first principles of the doctrines of Christ, and gradually to advance in spiritual perfection (chap. v. 14.)—He will not now discourse on the Christian principles as taught in the ancient oracles which are the foundation of religion—Repentance from works which merit death—Faith in God—The doctrine of baptisms, and the laying on of hands on the sacrifice as an acknowledgment that the offence deserved the death inflicted, or of the resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment—But he will show them, with God's assistance, the more sublime truths of the Gospel, as typified by the Law and its sacrificial system.

The Apostle digresses to enforce the necessity of spiritual improvement, from the consideration that if they did not advance they would be in danger of apostatizing irrecoverably—He declares that it would be impossible for those who have been thoroughly instructed in the Christian religion, and made partakers of all its blessings, and were eye-witnesses of the powerful miracles by which it was confirmed, and the miraculous operations of the Holy Spirit, who have apostatized from the faith of Christ, to be renewed again to an availing repentance—no stronger or higher evidence could be given them; and, by renouncing the divine doctrine, they crucify the Son of God again, and publicly dishonor him, rejecting the only sacrificial offering—The Apostle, by analogy, shows that those who bring forth the fruits of holiness, corresponding to the spiritual advantages they have received, shall be blessed of God; but those who bring forth the thorns and briers of sin and unbelief are rejected of him, whose end is to be burned as the barren soil is burnt up by the heat of the sun—They are encouraged to a firm adherence to the Gospel, from the consideration that God will not forget, but reward according to his promise, their work and labor of love, in ministering to the poor Christians, which were proofs of their faith in him—He exhorts them to the same active faith and love to the end of their lives, to be imitators of the believing Gentiles, who, through faith in Christ, and patience, are now inheriting, in the Gospel Church, the promises made to Abraham and to his seed through faith.

From the covenant made with Abraham the Apostle shows the necessity of faith and patience, and that not his children by descent, but by promise, are made his heirs—He affirms, that Abraham had long waited in faith and patience when he obtained the beginning of the promise made to him (Gen. xii. 2, 3. xvii. 1–8.) in the supernatural birth of Isaac; and, after his faith had been fully tried in his offering up, God confirmed his promise to him, and to his seed, of having their faith counted to them for righteousness, by an oath (Gen. xxii. 16, 17.)—That his believing posterity of all nations might be convinced of the unchangeableness of his purpose—by two things, the promise and the oath of God, which like him must be infinite and of eternal obligation, affording strong consolation to those who have fled for refuge in the hope of eternal life, promised through faith in the Gospel, which hope is the soul's anchor, fixed on Jesus, who is within the veil, gone before them into heaven with the sacrifice of himself, and made a High Priest for ever, after the order of Melchisedec.

¹³ FOR when God made promise to Abraham, because he could swear by no greater, ^aHe swore by himself, ¹⁴saying, “Surely blessing I will bless thee, and multiplying I will multiply thee.” ¹⁵ And so, after he had patiently endured, he obtained the promise. ¹⁶ For men verily swear by the greater: and ^ban oath for confirmation is to them an end of all strife. ¹⁷ Wherein God, willing more abundantly to show unto ^cthe heirs of promise ^dthe immutability of his counsel, ^e*confirmed it by an oath: ¹⁸ that by two immutable things, in which it was impossible for God to lie, we might have a strong consolation, who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope ^fset before us: ¹⁹ which hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast, ^gand which entereth into that within the veil; ²⁰ whither ^hthe forerunner is for us entered, even Jesus, ⁱmade a High Priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec.

The Apostle resumes his subject—the superiority of the priesthood of Christ to Aaron, and endeavours to lead them on to perfection in the deeper mysteries of the Gospel by drawing a parallel between Melchisedec and Christ (Gen. xiv. 18.)—He shows that Melchisedec was without father or mother; his descent or pedigree not being recorded, nor the end or the beginning of his life or priesthood mentioned—which, therefore, like that of the Son of God, may be regarded as perpetual—On account of his superior dignity, Abraham, the head of the patriarchs, paid him tithes—The priests were divinely appointed to receive tithes of their brethren the Levites; not because they were superior in descent, but as a portion for their maintenance (Numb. xviii. 21–31.)—But Melchisedec, who was not of the family of Aaron, as universal priest, received tithes of Abraham, and, as the representative of Christ, the high priest of the human race, blessed him who held the promises, (prefiguring through whom they were to be accomplished,) by which act he manifested his superiority both as King and Priest—Under the Jewish Law, tithes are paid to men who are removed by death, constantly changing; but under the patriarchal dispensation, he received them who has an endless life (Ps. cx. 4.), and therefore an unchangeable priesthood—Levi, who was commanded to receive tithes, was tithed and blessed by Melchisedec, in the person of Abraham, he being yet in the loins of his father.

The Apostle shows the inferiority of the Levitical Law and Priesthood, by the substitution of another different system and order of priesthood—The Levitical Priesthood not being able to accomplish the perfection or object for which it was ordained, the pardon of sin by a sufficient atonement ; another Priest was promised, after the typical and original priesthood of Melchisedec, (400 years before the Law,) and not after the priesthood of Aaron, which, being changed, requires also a change of the Law on which it was established—For Christ, of whom these things are spoken (Psalm ex. 4.), belongs to the tribe of Judah, which had no right to minister at a Jewish altar—And it is yet further evident that both the Law and the priesthood should be changed ; for it is predicted that another priest shall arise, after the similitude of Melchisedec, who is constituted not according to the Law, which is suited to the carnal nature of man, producing death, but according to the power of a more perfect system, which promises an endless priesthood and life, as God himself has testified.

¹¹ IF ^atherefore perfection were by the Levitical priesthood (for under it the people received the Law), what further need was there that another Priest should rise after the order of Melchisedec, and not be called after the order of Aaron ? ¹² For the priesthood being changed, there is made of necessity a change also of the Law. ¹³ For He of whom these things are spoken pertaineth to another tribe, of which no man gave attendance at the altar ; ¹⁴ for it is evident that ^bour Lord sprang out of Juda, of which tribe Moses spake nothing concerning priesthood. ¹⁵ And it is yet far more evident : for that after the similitude of Melchisedec there ariseth another Priest, ¹⁶ who is made, not after the law of a carnal commandment, but after the power of an endless life. ¹⁷ For He ^ctestifieth, “Thou art a Priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec.”

The Apostle declares the abrogation of the former law relative to the priesthood, on account of its weakness and unprofitableness for the purposes of man's redemption—The Law of Moses made no man perfect ; but the introduction of a better hope, and a better priesthood, perfected and completed the Law, and enables all, (and not the high priest only,) by the sacrifice of Christ, to approach before the altar of God—The priesthood of Christ was consecrated by an oath, to show its immutability, and its superiority to that priesthood which was established without an oath for a time only, to be changed at God's pleasure ; by which solemn oath, Jesus was made surety, or sponsor, of a better testament than that of Moses, in which there were many priests by reason of death—But the priesthood of Christ, confirmed by an oath, cannot pass on to any successor, because he lives for ever.

²³ And they truly were many priests, because they were not suffered to continue by reason of death ; ²⁴ but This Man, because he continueth ever, hath [‡]an unchangeable priesthood.

The Apostle applies the argument, by asserting that as the priesthood of Christ is unchangeable, as Christ ever lives in the body, he is able to save to the uttermost those who approach to God through his mediation and intercession—Such a High Priest was suitable to man, who was holy and merciful, undefiled by any sinful infirmity, separated from sinners and worldly occupations, and more exalted than all the angels of God, who required not, as the Jewish priests, to offer a daily sacrifice for his own sins, and then for the sins of the people—He offered no sacrifice for himself, but for the people, once, on the cross—For the Law, which is imperfect, makes men high priests who are imperfect, and therefore need repeated sacrifices, but the word of the oath (Psalm ex.) which was five hundred years from the giving of the Law, constituted the Son a High Priest for ever, by which the priesthood of the Law was disannulled—The Apostle, throughout, infers, that those who apostatized from Christianity to Judaism left the perfect for the imperfect, and that which remained for ever for that which was now abrogated.

²⁵ WHEREFORE He is able also to save them ^{*}to the uttermost that come unto God by Him, seeing He ever liveth ^ato make intercession for them. ²⁶ For such a High Priest became us, ^bwho is holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners, ^cand made higher than the heavens; ²⁷ who needeth not daily, as those high priests, to offer up sacrifice, ^dfirst for his own sins, ^eand then for the people's: for ^fthis He did once, when he offered up himself. ²⁸ For the Law maketh ^gmen high priests which have infirmity; but the word of the oath, which was since the Law, ^hmaketh the Son, ⁱwho is consecrated for evermore.

The Apostle asserts that of all the things he had discoursed on, the chief or principal was, that Christians have a great High Priest, who is exalted to the throne of God, a minister of the real Holy Places of the true Tabernacle, the Heavens; which were erected by God, and not, as the Jewish tabernacle, by man—and as every high priest daily offers gifts and sacrifices on earth, it is essential that Christ, as a High Priest, should have some sacrifice also to offer in Heaven—On earth he could not have officiated as priest, as the family of Aaron were appointed to offer, in the Jewish temple, gifts according to the Law, whose ministrations are a shadow or copy of the ministrations of Christ in Heaven, as the tabernacle itself was a pattern of things in the heavens (Heb. ix. 23.) shown to Moses in the Mount.

§ 19.—chap. viii. 6, to the end

The Apostle affirms that the Christian Priesthood is more excellent than the Levitical Priesthood, because it is established on better promises—the old covenant shadowing out, by temporal and secular blessings, the eternal and spiritual blessings of the new—Had it not been temporary and imperfect, there would have remained no occasion for another—The inefficiency of the Old Covenant, and the superior nature of the New, shown by God himself, when he reprov'd the Jews by his prophet Jeremiah (xxx. 31-34.)—The New Covenant was to be written on the hearts of men, influencing their actions, and not, like the Old, on stone—Instead of one family being set apart to teach their brethren (Dent. x. 8.), all shall be eligible to the office of instructor, to teach the forgiveness of sins and iniquities, through faith in the blood and sacrifice of Christ—God, having promised a New Covenant, hath made the former covenant old—Now that which has become useless, and has fallen into old age, is ready to disappear, or to cease to exist.

The Apostle shows, from the nature of the tabernacle, and the services performed therein, that they were typical of something better to be hereafter—With this view he reminds them of the furniture in that part of the tabernacle which represented the visible world, called holy (Exod. xxv. 26–40.), and that also which was placed in that part of the tabernacle separated by the second veil, called the Holy of Holies—The tabernacle being thus arranged by divine direction, the priests always performed the service of God in the first part of it, which figured the worship men offer on earth to the invisible Deity—In the second part the high priest entered only one day in a year, and there offered up the blood of a sacrificed beast for the sins of himself and the people (Levit. xvi. 14, 15.)—The Holy Ghost, by whom all this was appointed, thereby signifying that the way into God’s immediate presence was not made manifest to men by the worship of the first tabernacle; which figure or shadow of future things remained in the Apostle’s time (in the temple service)—when gifts and sacrifices are offered which could not take away the guilt of sin from the mind—as they were the types only of the spiritual purity required when the worship of God should be reformed by the Gospel dispensation.

¹ THEN verily the first covenant had also ^{*}ordinances of divine service, and a ^aworldly sanctuary. ² For [†]there was a tabernacle made; the first, ^cwherein was ^dthe candlestick, and ^ethe table, and the showbread; which is called the [†]sanctuary. ³ And [§]after the second veil, the tabernacle which is called the Holiest of all; ⁴ which had the golden censer, and [§]the ark of the covenant overlaid round about with gold, wherein was ^hthe golden pot that had manna, and ⁱAaron’s rod that budded, and [§]the tables of the covenant; ⁵ and ^kover it the cherubim of glory shadowing the mercy-seat; of which we cannot now speak particularly.^h ⁶ Now when these things were thus ordained, [†]the priests went always into the first tabernacle, accomplishing the service of God; ⁷ but into the second went the high priest alone ^monce every

Having described the ineffectual ministrations of the Levitical priesthood in the earthly tabernacle, the Apostle shows that Christ was the High Priest of those good things or services which were thus prefigured; having entered as High Priest with the sacrifice of his own blood, into the real holy places in heaven, and obtained for man everlasting remission of sin—If the ministrations of the Law, by divine appointment, served to cleanse the body for the tabernacle worship, and to redeem it from legal punishments, how much more will the blood of Christ, who being raised from the dead by the Spirit, and having offered his sacrificed body without blemish to God, possess power to purify the spirits of men (adumbrated by the cleansing of the body by the Law) from the pollution of sinful works, which merit death, and fit them for worshipping God in heaven; and on account of the efficacy of his blood, Christ is the Mediator of the new covenant or contract between God and man; making a real atonement for transgressions under the law of conscience and the Law of Moses, which the legal sacrifices could not accomplish, that the Gentiles, as well as the Jews, might receive the promised inheritance.

¹¹ BUT Christ being come, ^aa High Priest ^bof good things to come, ^cby a greater and more perfect Tabernacle, not made with hands, that is to say, not of this building; ¹² neither ^dby the blood of goats and calves, but ^eby his own blood; He entered in ^fonce into the holy place, ^ghaving obtained eternal redemption for us. ¹³ For if ^hthe blood of bulls and of goats, and ⁱthe ashes of a heifer sprinkling the unclean, sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh: ¹⁴ how much more ^jshall the blood of Christ, ^kwho through the Eternal Spirit ^loffered himself without ^mspot to God, ⁿpurge your conscience from ^odead works ^pto serve the living God! ¹⁵ And ^qfor this cause ^rHe is the Mediator of the New Testament, ^sthat by means of death, for the redemption of the transgressions that were under the First Testament, ^tthey which are called might receive the promise of eternal inheritance.

The Apostle proceeds, by proving that remission of sins could be obtained only by the death of Christ—God, whenever he entered into covenant with man, having made the death of an appointed sacrifice necessary to its ratification, thereby intimating that his intercourse with man was founded on the sacrifice of his Son—He shows, from the practice both of God and man, that the death of Christ was necessary to the establishment of the New Covenant, as no covenant was of force while the appointed sacrifice lived—For which reason the covenant at Sinai, which was a renewal of that under which Adam was placed in Paradise, was not made without blood (Exod. xxiv. 5–9.)—The tabernacle also, and the vessels of the ministry, were consecrated to the service of God by the sprinkling of blood (Exod. xxix. 12.)—And the Law with this view appointed almost all things to be cleansed with blood (Lev. xvii. 11. Numb. xix. 2–10.), and without the shedding of blood it allowed no remission of sin.

¹⁶ FOR where a testament is, there must also of necessity ^abe the death of the testator; ¹⁷ for ^ba testament is of force after men are dead; otherwise it is of no strength at all while the testator liveth: ¹⁸ whereupon ^cneither the First Testament was ^ddedicated without blood. ¹⁹ For when Moses had spoken every precept to all the people according to the Law, ^ehe took the blood of calves and of goats, ^fwith water, and ^gscarlet wool, and hyssop, and sprinkled both the book and all the people, ²⁰ saying, “This ^his the blood of the Testament which God hath enjoined unto you.” ²¹ Moreover ⁱhe sprinkled likewise with

The Apostle having demonstrated that there could be neither pardon of sin, nor admission into heaven, without the sacrifice of the death of Christ, it was necessary that the Tabernacle and its utensils, which were the earthly representations of celestial things, should be opened to man, and cleansed from defilement by the sacrifices of bulls and goats, whose substituted life typified the vicarious sacrifice of Christ, but the real heavenly places themselves could be opened only to man by the actual offering of the heavenly victim—Christ not being an earthly High Priest (viii. 4.) entered into heaven itself, presenting his crucified body there as the High Priest and Mediator between God and man, in the manifestation of the divine presence for ever—His sacrifice, being more excellent than those of the Levitical priesthood (which were continued emblems of the same), required no annual repetition, or he must have suffered yearly since the world was formed—He offered himself once for all, in the last of the dispensations of God, and by his one sacrifice he fulfilled and put an end to the typical sin offerings of the Mosaic Law (Dan. ix. 24.), subduing sin, and obtaining in the human nature pardon for all, by the sacrifice of his flesh—And as all men, on account of Adam's transgression, are appointed by God once to die, and after that the judgment; so Christ, as the second Adam, suffered death (v. 8, 9.), and made an atonement for the sins of the first, and through him of all mankind, that he might appear again as the High Priest of the human race, in the glory of the Shechinah (in allusion to the Jewish high priest on the day of purification, Numb. vi. 23-26. Luke i. 19-23.), to bless his people with eternal salvation.

The Apostle, having fully asserted the inefficacy of the typical representations and ceremonies of the Law, declares that as a shadow or faint adumbration of the spiritual and eternal blessings, which were to come by the Gospel, it can never by its emblematical sacrifices confer the real pardon of sin, which is further demonstrated from the annual repetition of the legal sacrifices, when the people's former sins were still remembered, and confessed as unpardoned, and unexpiated; and the impossibility that the blood of animals could take away the sins of accountable moral agents.

The Apostle, in the words of David (Ps. xl. 6-8. Septuagint), points out the design of the legal sacrifices, and the manner in which Christ fulfilled them—it being impossible that sin could be removed, or the Divine Justice satisfied, by all the typical and atoning offerings and sacrifices of the Law—A body was prepared for Christ, that he might do the will of God, to suffer and die for men, as was predicted in the volume of the Mosaic Law and Prophecies—The Apostle argues from this prophetic Psalm, that as God has declared he willed no longer the sacrifices prescribed by the Law, and as Christ has fulfilled them all by accomplishing man's redemption according to the appointed will of God, it is evident the first and typical sacrifices are abolished, that the only real and permanent sin offering of the Gospel may be established—the sacrifice of flesh in the body of Christ, which is the appointed will of God for the sanctification of men.

⁵ WHEREFORE when He cometh into the world, He ^asaith,— “Sacrifice and offering thou wouldest not,

But a body ^{*}hast thou prepared me :

⁶ In burnt offerings and sacrifices for sin Thou hast had no pleasure.

⁷ Then said I, Lo, I come

(In the volume of the book it is written of me)

⁸ Above when he said, “Sacrifice and offering and burnt offerings and offering for sin Thou wouldest not, neither hadst pleasure therein ;” (which are offered by the Law ;) ⁹ then said he, “Lo, I come to do thy will, [O God !]” He taketh away the first, that he may establish the second. ¹⁰ By ^bthe which will we are sanctified ‘through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all.

The Apostle points out the difference between the efficacy of the legal sacrifices and the sacrifice of Christ, and the difference between the Levitical Priesthood and the Priesthood of Christ—The former were many, and made daily offerings, without being able to take away the smallest sin—But Christ, once for all, by his one offering, which is for ever efficacious in the presence of God, has put away all sin, and has obtained eternal pardon and life for those who are sanctified by faith in this atonement, as is testified by the Holy Ghost (Jer. xxxi. 33, 34. and viii. 10–12.), and where a perfect pardon is obtained, whereby God is reconciled to man, there can be no need of any further sin offering ; consequently the Jewish ritual must be abolished.

¹⁶ “This ^fis the covenant that I will make with them

After those days, saith the Lord,

I will put my laws into their hearts,

And in their minds will I write them ;

¹⁷ ^{*}And their sins and iniquities will I remember no more.”

Lev. xvi. 4. Num. viii. 7.), to be steadfast in the confession of their hope of eternal life, for God is faithful, who has promised it through Christ ; assisting each other under trials, and exciting to love and good works : not absenting themselves from the worship of God, as some of the Christian Jews did, on account of persecution, or prejudice against the Gentile converts ; but exhorting and comforting one another the more, as they see the judgments of God approach on the Jewish nation.

The Apostle, from the fear that neglect of Christian communion should lead to apostacy, declares that for those who renounce Christianity, after having been convinced of the truth, there remains no other atonement for sin, but a dreadful expectation of judgment, which will destroy the Jewish nation, as the opposers of God (Num. xvi. 35. and 2 Thess. i. 7, 8. which was fulfilled in the destruction of their temple and city by fire)—For if those who denied the divine authority of Moses' Law, who was only a servant, died without mercy (Num. xv. 30. Deut. xvii. 6.), how much more severely will they be punished who have rejected and treated with contempt the Son of God, and have counted his sacrificial blood, that ratified the new covenant of their redemption, as that of a common or unholy person, and who have insulted the Holy Spirit, by whose gifts the truths of the Gospel were confirmed!—That the punishment of apostates is certain, is evident from the word of God himself, who has declared he will judge the enemies of his people (Deut. xxxii. 35, 36.)—And God, who lives for ever, can punish for ever.

²⁶ For "if we sin wilfully ^bafter that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins, ²⁷ but a certain fearful looking for of judgment and ^cfiery indignation, which shall devour the adversaries. ²⁸ He ^dthat despised Moses' Law died without mercy ^eunder two or three witnesses: ²⁹ of ^fhow much sorer punishment, suppose ye, shall he be thought worthy, who hath trodden under foot ^gthe Son of God, and ^hhath counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith he was sanctified, an unholy thing, ⁱand hath done despite unto the Spirit of grace! ³⁰ For we know Him that hath ^jsaid, "Vengeance belongeth unto me, I will recompense, [saith the Lord]." And ^kagain, "The Lord shall judge his people." ³¹ It ^lis a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God!

As a further inducement to them to continue in the faith, he reminds them of the sufferings and persecutions they had overcome, when they were first enlightened by the Gospel—From the remembrance of which the Apostle admonishes them not to renounce their faith in Christ, but to have continued patience, that they may patiently suffer for the faith here, that they may receive the promise of eternal life hereafter—Further, to encourage them to perseverance, the Apostle reminds them, in the words of Habakkuk (chap. ii. 3.), of the faithfulness of God in performing his promises of deliverance, and that the just shall be preserved by his faith (fulfilled in the escape of the Christians from Jerusalem)—But those who through fear draw back from their faith in God, expose themselves to eternal perdition.

³² But ^acall to remembrance the former days, in which, ^bafter ye were illuminated, ye endured ^ca great fight of afflictions; ³³ partly, whilst ye were made ^da gazing-stock both by reproaches and afflictions; and partly, whilst ^eye became companions of them that were so used. ³⁴ For ye had compassion of me ^fin my bonds, and ^gtook joyfully the spoiling of your goods, knowing ^hin yourselves that ⁱye have in heaven a better and an enduring substance. ³⁵ Cast not away therefore your confidence, ^jwhich hath great recompence of reward. ³⁶ For ^kye have need of patience, that, after ye have done the will of God, ^lye might receive the promise. ³⁷ For ^myet a little while, and ⁿHe that shall come will come, and will not tarry. ³⁸ Now ^othe just shall live by faith: but if any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him.

§ 30.—chap. xi. 1-7.

As a further inducement to the Hebrews to persevere in the faith and patience of the Gospel, the Apostle reminds them of the wonderful effects of justifying faith, exemplified in the lives of their ancestors—He describes faith as “giving present subsistence to future things hoped for,” on the promises of God ; and a clear demonstration to the mind of the reality of those revealed truths which have been, and which are to come—By this spiritual faculty their ancestors obtained from God an honorable testimony—At the beginning, the formation of the material universe, from no preëxistent matter, was the subject of faith (Gen. i. 1.)—In every dispensation of God there has been but one appointed means of salvation—This is instanced in the Adamic covenant in the faith of Abel, who, by his accepted sacrifice, declares to this day the necessity of an atonement for reconciliation with God—In the translation of Enoch, which teaches that without a faith in the invisible God, and a correspondent life, it is not possible to please him—Noah, having faith in the revelation imparted to him by God, when there were no signs of the flood, prepared the ark, and, as the second common progenitor of man, became heir to this justification by faith, and his temporal deliverance typified the eternal redemption of all his spiritual children.

Abraham, with whom God more particularly entered into covenant, had implicit faith in the promises of God, when he left his own country by the direction of God, in search of a land which he had never seen nor heard of—He dwelt in tabernacles in the land of promise, showing that he and his heirs had no fixed habitation on earth—by faith in the promises of God, Sarah became a mother, contrary to the common course of nature, by the supernatural birth of Isaac—Abraham, Sarah, Isaac, and Jacob, continued steadfast in the belief of the promises, which they did not see fulfilled, believing that God would give them the numerous promised seed, and the heavenly rest of Canaan—These were strangers and pilgrims on earth, looking for the country in which their fathers dwelt, better than the earthly Canaan—Not Chaldea, which they had left, and might have returned to ; but in faith they sought for a heavenly inheritance and spiritual blessings (Acts vii. 2-5.)—They desired no earthly country, therefore God has assumed the title of their God (the God of the Hebrews), and has prepared for them the heavenly city they sought—By faith Abraham laid Isaac upon the altar, though he had no other son to inherit the promises, concluding that God would fulfil them by raising him from the dead—from whence he received him as a type of the resurrection of the only-begotten Son of God—By this great exercise of his faith and piety he was made the pattern of all believers, fully illustrating the doctrine of justification by faith, and testifying that the patriarchs believed in the immortality of the soul, and the resurrection of the body, and that they rested not on temporal promises.

out, not knowing whither he went. ⁹ By faith he sojourned in [the] land of promise, as in a strange country, ^b dwelling in tabernacles with Isaac and Jacob, ^c the heirs with him of the same promise: ¹⁰ for he looked ^d for a city which hath foundations, ^e whose builder and maker is God. ¹¹ Through faith also ^f Sara herself received strength to conceive seed, and ^g was delivered of a child when she was past age, because she judged Him ^h faithful who had promised. ¹² Therefore sprang there even of one, and ⁱ him as good as dead, ^j so many as the stars of the sky in multitude, and as the sand which is by the seashore innumerable.

¹³ These all died ^k in faith, ^l not having received the promises, but ^m having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them, and ⁿ confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth. ¹⁴ For they that say such things ^o declare plainly that they seek a country. ¹⁵ And truly, if they had been mindful of that country from whence they came out, they might have had opportunity to have returned; ¹⁶ but now they desire a better country, that is, a heavenly. Wherefore God is not ashamed ^p to be called their God; for ^q he hath prepared for them a city.

¹⁷ By faith ^r Abraham, when he was tried, offered up Isaac; and he that had received the promises ^s offered up his only-begotten son, ^t of whom it was ^u said, "That in Isaac shall thy seed be called:" ¹⁸ accounting that God ^v was able to raise him up, even from the dead; from whence also he received him in a figure.

The appointed heirs of the Abrahamic covenant expressed the same strong faith in the promises of God—by faith in the divine impulse, Isaac foretold to his two sons the blessings which were to be bestowed on them and their posterity—By faith, his son Jacob blessed the sons of Joseph (Gen. xlviii. 16.)—Worshippers of God in prospect of admission to the heavenly Canaan (Gen. xlvii. 31. and xlix. 30.)—In the full persuasion that God would give Canaan to Abraham and to his seed, Joseph, when ending his life, commanded that his bones might be carried with them from Egypt, that the promises might be fulfilled to him after his death (Gen. 1. 25. and Exod. xiii. 19.)—Moses was saved by the faith of his parents in the promises of God, who, judging from his appearance, or, as some suppose, from a revelation (Josephus, lib. ii. cap. 9. § 5-7.) concealed him without fear of the king's commandment—By faith in the promises of God, Moses himself, as the type of the Great Deliverer, renounced all worldly distinctions, preferring to suffer with the anointed people of God, as he looked for a higher reward in heaven—By faith he carried the Israelites out of Egypt, fearing God, who was invisible, rather than the wrath of Pharaoh, which was present to him—By faith he sprinkled the blood of the paschal lamb (Exod. xii.), and by the same principle the Israelites passed through the Red Sea—By faith and obedience to the command of God, the walls of Jericho miraculously fell down—Rahab, by faith in God, on account of the miracles he had wrought (Joshua ii. 10.), risked her life for the protection of the spies, and perished not with the unbelievers at Jericho.

The Apostle, having shown the nature and efficacy of faith by many illustrious examples from the Adamic and Patriarchal dispensations, now proves that the same active principle of faith directed, in all their great exploits, the judges, heroes, prophets, and kings, of the Mosaic dispensation—These all suffered and triumphed over the contempt and persecution of the world; supported by a firm and lively faith in things not seen, and in the expectation of the promised glories of a future state—But they had not yet received the heavenly rest, and that glorious reward promised to Abraham and to his seed—God having provided a better revelation, and a better means of faith, which made perfect all that had preceded, at the end of which all the spiritual children of Abraham, from the beginning to the completion of the Divine Economy, may be collected into one Church, and be admitted together, after the resurrection, to the full perfection of the Gospel blessings (Rev. vi. 11.)—The Apostle, in application of these arguments, exhorts them to imitate the faith and obedience of their eminent ancestors, who will bear testimony for or against them, looking from worldly to spiritual things, to Jesus, who is the author, and by his own sufferings, the most perfect example of truth, enduring the cross for the glory and happiness of man's redemption.

³² AND what shall I more say? for the time would fail me to tell of ^aGedeon, and of ^bBarak, and of ^cSamson, and of ^dJephthae; of ^eDavid also, and ^fSamuel, and of the Prophets: ³³ who through faith subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, ^gobtained promises, ^hstopped the mouths of lions, ³⁴ quenched ⁱthe violence of fire, ^jescaped the edge of the sword, ^kout of weakness were made strong, waxed valiant in fight, ^lturned to flight the armies of the aliens. ³⁵ Women ^mreceived their dead raised to life again. And others were ⁿtortured, not accepting deliverance; that they might obtain a better resurrection: ³⁶ and ^oothers had trial of cruel mockings and scourgings, yea, moreover ^pof bonds and imprisonment: ³⁷ they ^qwere stoned, they were sawn asunder, were tempted, were slain with the sword: ^rthey wandered about ^sin sheep-skins and goat-skins; being destitute, afflicted, tormented, ³⁸ (of whom the world was not worthy;) they wandered in deserts, and in mountains, and ^tin dens and caves of the earth.

Further to encourage them, under persecutions and trials, to faith and patience, the Apostle calls upon them to give particular attention to the greater sufferings of Christ, and reminds them of the exhortation of the Word of God (Prov. iii. 11, 12.), that chastisements are tokens of the divine favor, proving that God considers them beloved sons, and not as bastards, who are disregarded and neglected—Their earthly parents corrected them for faults, and were revered under penalty of death (Dent. xxi. 18-21.); how much more important to be subject to the Father of spirits, that they may live for ever?—These chastened them during the few days of this life, after their own will and convenience; but God chastens all for their advantage, that they may be made holy, and disciplined to righteousness; the peaceful fruit of God's chastisement—From these considerations he exhorts those who have been thus benefited by affliction, not to be discomforted, and driven away from Christ (Isa. xxxv. 3.), but to make every possible exertion under their temptations and afflictions, removing every obstacle that impedes their own and others' treading in the Christian path, that those who have been already alarmed by forsaking it, may not be totally prevented from proceeding on the road to Sion; but be rather healed and restored from their falls and weaknesses.

⁷ If ^gye endure chastening, God dealeth with you as with sons; for what son is he whom the father chasteneth not? ⁸ But if ye be without chastisement, ^hwhereof all are partakers, then are ye bastards, and not sons. ⁹ Furthermore, we have had fathers of our flesh which corrected us, and we gave them reverence: shall we not much rather be in subjection unto ⁱthe Father of spirits, and live? ¹⁰ For they verily for a few days chastened us ^jafter their own pleasure; but He for our profit, ^kthat we might be partakers of his holiness. ¹¹ Now no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous: nevertheless afterward it yieldeth ^lthe peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby.

The Apostle exhorts them to cultivate peace, as far as possible, with all men, and Christian holiness of heart and life, carefully observing lest any among them show a disposition to apostatize from the Gospel, lest any poisonous plant spring up and corrupt many; or any fornicator or profane person, who should abuse the liberty of the Gospel, such as Esau, who bartered his high blessings and privileges of the firstborn (Gen. xxv. 32. 34. Exod. xix. 22. Deut. xxi. 17.) for present and sensual gratifications—The Apostle further insinuates, that as Esau found no change or repentance in his father's mind (Gen. xxvii. 33.) when he afterwards sought the blessing and dominion over his brethren (Gen. xxvii. 37.) with tears; so, if they despise their heavenly birthrights by renouncing the Gospel, there would be no way left of regaining them.

† Or, way to change his mind

The Apostle shows the superiority of the birthrights of the spiritual children of Abraham, to those of his natural progeny, and therefore the greater sin of rejecting them, by contrasting the dispensation of the Law with that of the Gospel—Abraham's spiritual children, by faith in the Gospel, are not called to receive the Law, which was to prepare them for the earthly Canaan, to a mount capable of being touched, which burned with fire, and with those appalling signals of God's presence (Exod. xix.)

typical of his consuming anger against sinners, and the obscurity of the Law; but they are called to receive the mild and gracious dispensation of grace, from Mount Sion (Acts i. 4.), which shall prepare them for worshipping in the Sion of the Christian Church (Isa. lx.), which is the city of the living God, of a heavenly, not of a worldly nature, including the whole family of heaven and earth, from the beginning to the end of time.

¹⁸ For ye are not come unto ^athe Mount that might be touched, and that burned with fire, nor unto blackness, and darkness, and tempest, ¹⁹and the sound of a trumpet, and the voice of words; which voice they that heard ^bentreated that the word should not be spoken to them any more: ²⁰(for they could not endure that which was ^ccommanded, “And if so much as a beast touch the mountain, it shall be stoned, or thrust through with a dart;” ²¹and so ^dterrible was the sight!—that Moses said, “I exceedingly fear and quake:”) ²²but ye are come ^eunto Mount Sion; ^fand unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem; ^gand to an innumerable company of angels; ⁱ²³ to the general assembly and Church of ^hthe firstborn, ^jwhich are ^kwritten in heaven, and to God ^lthe Judge of all, and to the spirits of just men ^mmade perfect, ⁿ²⁴and to Jesus ^othe Mediator of the New ^p†Covenant, and to ^qthe blood of sprinkling, that speaketh better things ^rthan that of Abel.

The Apostle, from the superior excellence of the Gospel Dispensation, entreats them not to refuse the Mediator of this better covenant; for if their forefathers were destroyed in the wilderness for disobedience to Moses, who spake on the part of God to them on earth, their condemnation will be proportionably greater, who turn away from God, who speaks to them from heaven, by his Son, in the Gospel—At the giving of the Law his voice shook the earth—the power of heathen idolatry (Exod. xix. 18.), but now, in the New Dispensation, according to the prediction of the prophet (Haggai ii. 6.), not only the idolatrous worship, but the Mosaic Economy, was also to be shaken, which signifies the removal and change of those things constituted for a time, to make way for that better Dispensation which cannot be changed or shaken, which is to remain till the end of the world—From the unchangeable nature of the Gospel (Dan. vii. 18.), which, being the last dispensation of God, cannot be moved—St. Paul exhorts them to hold fast this heavenly gift, that they may serve God in the way that pleases him: for under the Gospel, as under the Law, God is a consuming fire to those who apostatize, and are disobedient to his will and commands.

²⁵ SEE that ye refuse not Him that speaketh. For ^aif they escaped not who refused him that spake on earth, much more shall not we escape, if we turn away from Him that speaketh from heaven. ²⁶ Whose ^bvoice then shook the earth: but now He hath promised, ^csaying, “Yet once more I shake not the earth only, but also ^kheaven.” ²⁷ And this word, “Yet once more,” signifieth ^dthe removing of those things that ^eare shaken, as of things that are made, that those things which cannot be shaken may remain. ²⁸ Wherefore we receiving a kingdom which cannot be moved, ^flet us have grace, whereby we may serve God acceptably with reverence and godly fear. ²⁹ For ^gour God is a consuming fire.

The Apostle exhorts the Hebrews to brotherly love, to acts of charity and merey, receiving into their houses strangers or travellers, after the example of Abraham and Lot (Gen. xviii. 3. xix. 2.); to have compassion for the sufferings of others, as those who are liable to the same evils, and to purity of conduct, from the fear of God's judgments—He admonishes them not to covet what Providence has given to another, but to be content with those things which are given to themselves; for God himself has promised to protect and provide for them (Joshua i. 5. 1 Chron. xxviii. 20.)—Christians may with greater confidence apply this promise to themselves, and trust with David, in poverty and affliction, on the omnipotence of God (Psalm cxviii. 6. LXX.)

The Apostle, further to convince them that the promises of God never fail, desires them to remember the examples of the deceased teachers (perhaps James the apostle and James the bishop of Jerusalem) who presided over them, and to imitate their faith, considering the wonderful support they received at the end of their lives, when they suffered a violent death, in testimony of Jesus Christ, who is for ever unchangeable—On this account they are warned not to be carried away with various and unapostolical doctrines; to have their hearts established in the efficacy of the sacrifice and death of Christ, for the pardon of sin, and not of the Levitical sacrifices of animals, appointed for meat, which cannot avail—Those who eat of the flesh of the sacrifices of the peace offerings and of the Law, trusting through them to be reconciled to God (Levit. xvii. 11–15.), have no right to eat of the sacrifice of the Christian altar; for, according to their own law, they are not to eat of any part of the animal whose blood had been offered as an atonement for sin, for the flesh of that animal was to be burned without the camp (Lev. xvi. 27.)—Christ, of whom this was the type, opened the heaven of heavens to man, by the sprinkling of his own blood (chap. xii. 24.), and offered his flesh as a living sacrifice without the gate of the city—He exhorts them so to follow Christ, making a living sacrifice of the flesh, renouncing this world, which is not their continuing city, and offering to God, through him, the only acceptable sacrifice of praise and thankfulness, with acts of charity and mercy to man for Christ's sake.

[END OF THE EPISTLE TO THE HEBREWS.]

SECTION II.—After his Liberation, St. Paul visits Italy, Spain, Britain, and the West.

[WE cannot be certain what were the travels of St. Paul between his first and second imprisonment at Rome. The probable accounts must be collected from the remaining testimony of the Second Epistle to Timothy, and the desire he had expressed in his Epistles written before his liberation.

Bishop Pearson, with many very eminent and learned theologians, has been of opinion, that when he left Italy he first proceeded to Spain, and the West. Bishop Stillingfleet, and, since his time, the learned Bishop Burgess in our own day, have strenuously defended this opinion.

In his Epistle to the Romans (chap. xv. 24.) he had long before expressed his determination to go into Spain—"Whensoever I take my journey into Spain, I will come to you:—for I trust to see you in my journey, and to be brought on my way thitherward by you, if first I be somewhat filled with your company."

There appears to be sufficient traditional evidence to satisfy us that the Apostle eventually fulfilled his determination.

The testimonies of the first six centuries either expressly record St. Paul's journey to the West and to Britain, or offer such evidence of the propagation of Christianity in Spain and Britain, as coincides with these testimonies.

1. The first and most important is the testimony of Clemens Romanus, "the intimate friend and fellow-laborer of St. Paul." He says, that St. Paul, in preaching the Gospel, went to the utmost bounds of the West, ἐπὶ τὸ τέρμα τῆς δόσεως. This is not a rhetorical expression, as Dr. Hales supposes, but the usual designation of Britain. Catullus calls Britain "Ultima Britannia," and "Ultima Occidentis Insula." The West included Spain, Gaul, and Britain. Theodoret speaks of the inhabitants of Spain, Gaul, and Britain, as dwelling in the utmost bounds of the West, τὰς τῆς ἐσπέρας ἐσχατίας. The connexion between Britain and the West will be seen in other passages quoted by Bishop Stillingfleet^a; and in the following of Nicephorus^b—πρὸς ἐσπέριον ὠκεανὸν εἰσβαλὼν καὶ τὰς Βρετανίας νήσους εὐαγγελισάμενος. The utmost bounds of the West, then, is not rhetorical language in itself, for it is a common appellation of Britain; nor as applied to St. Paul, for it was said of others of the apostles.

2. In the second century (A. D. 176), Irenæus speaks of Christianity as propagated to the utmost bounds of the earth, ἕως περάτων τῆς γῆς, by the apostles and their disciples; and particularly specifies the churches planted (ἐν ταῖς Ἰβηρίαις, and ἐν Κέλτοις) in Spain, and the Celtic nations^c. By the Κέλτοι were meant the people of Germany, Gaul, and Britain^d.

3. At the end of the second and the beginning of the third century (A. D. 193–220), Tertullian mentions, among the Christian converts, Hispaniarum omnes termini, et Galliarum diversæ nationes et Britannorum inaccessa Romanis loca, Christo vero subdita^e. Though Irenæus and Tertullian, in their testimonies, do not expressly mention St. Paul, yet the conversion of Britain to Christianity is recorded as the work of the apostles and their disciples. It is most interesting to find such writers speaking of their proximity to the origin of the Christian Church, and consequently of the perfect competency of their testimony. “Hesterni sumus,” says Tertullian, “et vestra omnia adimplevinus, urbes, insulas, castella, municipia, conciliabula, castra ipsa, tribus, Palatium, Senatum, forum^f.”

4. In the fourth century (A. D. 270–340), Eusebius says that some of the apostles passed over the ocean to the British isles, ἐπὶ τὰς καλουμένας Βρετανίας νήσους^g; and Jerome, in the same century (A. D. 329–420), ascribes this province expressly to St. Paul, and says that, after his imprisonment, having been in Spain, he went from ocean to ocean, and that he preached the Gospel in the western parts^h. In the western parts he included Britain, as is evident from a passage in his Epitaphium Marcellæⁱ.

5. In the fifth century (423–460), Theodoret mentions the Britons among the nations converted by the apostles; and says that St. Paul, after his release from imprisonment, went to Spain, and from thence carried the light of the Gospel to other nations^k. He says also that St. Paul brought salvation to the islands that lie in the ocean^l, ταῖς ἐν τῷ πελάγει διακειμέναις νήσοις τὴν ὠφέλειαν προσήνεγκε. If there could be any doubt whether the British islands were meant by the island that lies in the ocean, we have, besides the passage of Nicephorus, before quoted, the following of Chrysostom, who thus describes them: καὶ γὰρ αἱ Βρετανικαὶ νῆσοι αἱ τῆς θαλάττης ἐκτὸς κεῖμεναι, καὶ ἐν αὐτῷ οὖσαι τῷ Ὠκεανῷ, τῆς δυναμέως τοῦ ῥήματος ἡσθοντο^m.

6. In the sixth century (560–600), Venantius Fortunatus says thus of St. Paul: Transit et Oceanum, vel qua facit insula portum, Quasque Britannus habet terras, quasque ultima Thule. This passage has been sometimes hesitatingly admitted, as if verse were necessarily the vehicle of fiction. But that the testimony of Venantius Fortunatus is not to be ascribed to the licence of poetical exaggeration, and that the language of Clemens, Jerome, and Theodoret, is neither ambiguous nor hyperbolicⁿ, we may judge from an authority, which will not be suspected of making any undue concessions in favor of the evidences of Christianity, but who was well acquainted with the political facilities which the Roman empire at that time afforded for the universal propagation of the Gospel: “The public highways,” says Mr. Gibbon, “which had been constructed for the use of the legions, opened an easy passage for the Christian missionaries from Damascus to Corinth, and from Italy to the extremity of Spain or Britain^o.”

To the ancient authorities here cited, we have to add the concurrence of the very learned and judicious modern writers referred to before. We may add further, the testimony of Archbishop Parker^p:—“Paulum ipsum Gentium doctorem, cum aliis gentibus, tum nominatim Britannis, nunciasset post priorem suam Romæ incarcerationem, et Theodoretus et Sophronius Patriarcha Hierosolymitanus affirmant. Hoc quod Pontificii incredibile atque adeo impossibile statuunt, cum vero maxime cohæret:” and of Camden—“Certum est Britannos in ipsa Ecclesiæ infantia Christianam religionem imbibisse^q,” who cites Theodoret and Sophronius, and Venantius Fortunatus, in testimony of St. Paul’s journey to Britain. Cave also, in his Life of St. Paul, quotes the same writers, and says, that by the island that lies in the ocean, Theodoret undoubtedly meant Britain. Such strength of ancient and modern authorities ought, if I may judge by my own convictions, to put the subject of St. Paul’s preaching the Gospel in Britain beyond all controversy or doubt.

The general evidence thus adduced by Bishops Stillingfleet and Burgess, appears to be quite sufficient to prove the fact, that St. Paul came to Britain; but I cannot assent to the early date which is assigned to this event by Gildas, Jerome, and Eusebius. On this point it seems the authorities on which they depended led them into error.

The testimony of Josephus is opposed to those of Jerome, Eusebius, and Gildas, and as he lived nearer to the times in question, and as the date assigned by him to the recall of Felix is perfectly consistent with the other dates, and leaves sufficient time for all the Apostle's travels, before his second return to Rome, I consider the authority of Josephus preferable to that of the subsequent writers. The decision of the question depends on the date of the recall of Felix, and this cannot be certainly ascertained.

Bishop Burgess has discussed the question of the dates of St. Paul's voyage to Rome, the recall of Felix, and the Apostle's subsequent tour to Spain and Britain, with his usual skill and learning. Among other reasons, for assigning the year 56 to St. Paul's voyage to Rome, and consequently his release from imprisonment to the year 58, he mentions the following, which appear however to be capable of easy solution.

1. Gildas says that Christianity was introduced into Britain before the defeat of the British forces under Boadicea.

This might have been done by others than the apostles.

2. An ancient British record informs us, that Caractacus returned from Rome to Britain in the year 58, A. D. and that the royal family introduced Christianity.

St. Paul, therefore, might have been invited into Britain by some of the Britons, who may have seen his friends, and perhaps his Epistle, at Rome; but it does not follow that he must necessarily have accepted that invitation as early as 58, nor before his various other duties permitted. His deliverance from his first imprisonment appears to have been the most favorable opportunity that presented itself.

3. The removal of Pallas, the brother of Felix, in the second year of Nero, implies, that Felix would be removed about the same time. It appears from Tacitus (Annal. l. 12.), that he was dependent upon his brother's power.

It is not by any means certain that Nero would necessarily have recalled Felix on this account. Felix had rendered great public service to the province in clearing it of robbers. On the contrary, Josephus tells us, that Pallas, even in the sixth year of Nero, obtained the pardon of his brother. The truth seems to be, that though Pallas was no longer a favorite, his influence with Nero had not entirely declined at the Roman court—Agrippina, at least, retained her authority over Nero, and Pallas his influence with Agrippina, and by her means Felix may have been continued in his office.

4. Josephus tells us that Nero pardoned Felix when Pallas was high in favor with him. This necessarily implies that it was early in the reign of Nero.

It may mean when Pallas, though out of office, was more in favor than before—or when the revenge of Nero was satisfied with the death of Agrippina, and he began to look with more favor upon Pallas.

The space between 63 and 68, the probable date of St. Paul's martyrdom, is amply sufficient for the remaining journeyings of St. Paul between his return from Britain and his martyrdom at Rome.

It does not appear, from a careful examination of the dates of events that took place from 53, the year which Bishop Burgess would assign to the Epistle to the Romans, or to the beginning of 58, the latest and most usual date, that there is sufficient space to allow the journey to Britain.

A very ingenious anonymous writer, in the 19th Number of the Classical Journal, has attempted to reconcile the times of St. Paul's journeys, and the dates of the Epistles, with the supposition that Felix was recalled in 56. As I have adopted the opinion of Bishop Pearson, and prefer the authority of Josephus to that of Jerome and Eusebius, that the date was 62, I shall only observe that it appears to be impossible to reconcile the periods of the conversion of St. Paul—his return to Damascus—the council at Jerusalem—and the time unavoidably occupied by the planting of the several Churches with this early date of his first imprisonment.

The venerable and learned Dr. Hales, in his valuable Essay on the Origin and Purity of the primitive Church of the British Isles, and its independence of the Church of Rome, considers Lles, or Lucius, to be the first person who established Christianity in Britain. It does not seem necessary to enter further into his arguments than to observe, that he has succeeded in demonstrating the absurdity of venturing to come to any positive conclusions in the affirmative, especially as St. Paul has omitted all notice of his journey to Britain in his Second Epistle to Timothy. There still, however, appears to be sufficient evidence to justify my adoption of Bishop Burgess's opinion, that St. Paul preached in Britain, which is supported also by the authority of Parker, Camden, Usher, Stillingfleet, Gibson, Nelson, Rowland, Collyer, and Bishop Pearson.]

Jerusalem.

[FROM his journey to the West we may conclude that St. Paul went to Judæa, and probably to Jerusalem. In his Epistle to the Hebrews, he had declared this to be his intention. "Know ye," he says, Heb. xiii. 23., "that Timothy is set at liberty; with whom, if he come shortly, I will see you." Dr. Hales thinks he could not venture to go up again to Jerusalem, as his life would thereby be uselessly endangered. It cannot however appear improbable, that the wretched state of confusion to which that miserable country had been brought, would have prevented any further judicial interference with the Apostle. He would now have heard, and have been deeply affected by, the mournful cry of Jesus, the son of Ananias—"A voice from the east, a voice against Jerusalem and the temple." This sad cry was begun four years before the commencement of the war, about the year 62 St. Paul had long foreseen the approaching destruction of Jerusalem, and this voice must have appeared to the Apostle, as the result of a divine or supernatural impulse^a.

^a Le Clerc, II. E. An. 62, n. v. ap. Lardner, vol. iii. p. 522, observes this account of the son of Ananias: "Quæ si vera sunt, non immerito Josephus rem divinitus contigisse censuit."

"We have seen," says L'Enfant and Beausobre, in their general preface to St. Paul's Epistles, p. 34, "that the Apostle was accustomed to go from time to time to Jerusalem, and to take the opportunity of the solemn festivals, so long as the temple subsisted. The Jewish Christians did not neglect the ordinances of the Law. St. Paul himself did not neglect them, that he might give no offence to the Jews." "I readily assent," says Dr. Lardner, "to what they say about the Apostle's going to Jerusalem; I would almost think that St. Paul was desirous to go thither, to praise God in his temple for the favorable circumstances of his imprisonment at Rome, and for his deliverance from it. St. Paul's case at Rome very much resembled what had happened to him at Corinth, after which we find he had a vow, and went from Corinth to Ephesus, and hastened to Jerusalem, (Acts xviii. 9, 22.) In like manner I imagine, that now St. Paul went to Jerusalem, as soon as he could; but he made no long stay there. It had not been his custom so to do since his conversion.

"Having been at Jerusalem, I suppose that he visited divers Churches, which had been planted by him, and then returned to Rome^b."

Antioch.

[FROM Jerusalem it is probable St. Paul went to Antioch in Syria, he having always made this route in his former journeyings. This is Lord Barrington's opinion; but Dr. Lardner thinks he went from Judæa to Ephesus, and there left Timothy, whom he had sent for two years before, to come to him from Ephesus to Rome. From Ephesus, Dr. Lardner thinks, he went to Laodicea and Colossé, and possibly returned to Rome by Troas, Philippi, and Corinth. I have preferred the opinion of Lord Barrington.]

[THE Philippians had liberally contributed to the support and comfort of St. Paul, while he was in prison at Rome, Phil. iv. 15, 16. And we may conclude that he would have endeavoured to go round by Philippi to thank them, and to confirm the Church, as he had expressed his intention of doing, Phil. i. 25. and ii. 24.

SECTION VII.—From Philippi St. Paul goes to Corinth.

[WE know that he went to Corinth, for he left there Erastus sick (2 Tim. iv. 20.), which he could not do in his first journey to Rome, for then he did not go near Corinth, as we may justly infer from the account St. Luke gives us of his voyage.]

[FROM Corinth St. Paul goes to Troas, and there leaves his cloak and parchments (2 Tim. iv. 13.), for he cannot well be supposed to have left them there in his former voyage, when he had the collections to carry with him to Jerusalem; and when he had hired a ship, on purpose to convey him, his things, and companions.]

[AT what time St. Paul went to Miletum is uncertain. He left there Trophimus sick, (2 Tim. iv. 20.) As this is the next place he mentions after saying he had been at Troas, we are justified in referring it to the present period.]

SECTION X.—From Miletum to Rome.

[ST. PAUL now sails to Italy, and goes to Rome, where he finds a very different face of affairs from the time of his first being there. The Christian religion was now treated not only as a new, but as an impious, superstition, and the Christians as abominable people, who deserved to be hated of mankind. Suet. In Ner. c. 16. Tacit. Annal. 15, 44. This, perhaps, was owing to the calumnies which the Jews spread of them every where, and which, perhaps, also the Gnostics, by this time, gave too much countenance to. Therefore St. Paul, as one of the chief of his sect, was cast into so close confinement, that Onesiphorus “with difficulty found him out,” (2 Tim. i. 17.), and was in such danger, that no man stood by him, (2 Tim. iv. 16.) However, St. Paul made such an apology for himself and the Christian religion, that he was for some time delivered “out of the mouth of the lion,” and the Christian religion became more fully known, (2 Tim. iv. 17.) During his second imprisonment at Rome, he sends Titus (who came hither with him from Nicopolis) to Dalmatia (2 Tim. iv. 10.), and after his first and second defence, he writes his Second Epistle to Timothy. That Epistle seems to have been directed to him in some place, from whence he was to take Ephesus in his way to Rome, as may be gathered from chap. iv. 14, 15, and iv. 19., from whence it would not be much out of his way to go by Troas to Rome; as we may collect from ver. 13; and from whence he might bring Mark with him, who is said to have been at Jerusalem. I think it is probable that it might be about Lystra, which was Timothy’s native place, and where possibly St. Paul left him (when he went from Jerusalem in his last journey to Rome) to stay with his friends, and be useful to the Churches in that neighbourhood. This seems to me the more likely, because he speaks “of the faith of his grandmother Lois, and his mother Eunice,” chap. i. which perhaps the thought of the place where he sent his letter might bring to his mind. I think thus also, viz. because he mentions his afflictions and persecutions in these countries, and no other (chap. ii. 10, 11.), for the very same reason. His persecutions elsewhere, and some of which were as severe, or severer, Timothy knew; having been his companion in most of his travels since Timothy’s conversion. That all this was done during St. Paul’s second imprisonment at Rome will appear from the following considerations:—In the first imprisonment Timothy was a prisoner with him, and continued so after St. Paul’s release, (Heb. xiii. 21.) And St. Paul joins Timothy with him in three of the epistles he wrote in the first imprisonment; and now Timothy was absent from him, (2 Tim. iv. 9–21.) Besides, in the first imprisonment, St. Paul was a prisoner at large in his own hired house; all persons having free access to him, (Acts xxviii. 16–30.) When he wrote this Epistle, he was in such close custody, that Onesiphorus with difficulty found him out, (2 Tim. i. 17.)

Finally, in the first imprisonment he writes, that he should soon be enlarged, (Philip. i. 25. and ii. 24. Philemon ver. 22.) In this Epistle he tells Timothy that “he is ready to be offered, and the time of his departure is at hand ;” that “he has fought the good fight, and finished his course,” (2 Tim. iv. 1-8.); and though “God had delivered him out of the mouth of the lion (Nero or Helius Cæsar) at his first defence,” yet he does not add that he will deliver him out of it: but “from every evil work, and preserve him unto his heavenly kingdom,” (2 Tim. iv. 16-19.), for at this time, he says, he had left Erastus in Corinth, and Trophimus sick at Miletum; whereas, he could neither be at Corinth nor Miletum in his first voyage.—Lord Barrington’s Miscellanea Sacra, vol. i. p. 98.

“St. Paul,” says Dr. Lardner, “though a prisoner, had lived very comfortably at Rome, and he there had great success in his services for the Gospel. It seems to me, that he now considered that city as the most proper place for him to reside in the remaining part of his life. It was the most conspicuous place in all the world, and the place of the greatest resort from all parts; there he hoped to be more useful than in any other place.”]

SECTION XI.—St. Paul is imprisoned at Rome in the general Persecution by Nero.

[THE reasons which have induced me to conclude with the great majority of commentators, that St. Paul was twice, and not once only, imprisoned at Rome, are given in the preceding section. It seems probable, from 2 Tim. i. 15-17., that the Apostle was imprisoned for some time at Rome during his second residence in that city:—

“This thou knowest, that all they which are in Asia turned away from me; of whom are Phygellus and Hermogenes.

“The Lord give mercy unto the house of Onesiphorus; for he oft refreshed me, and was not ashamed of my chain.

“But when he was in Rome he sought me out very diligently, and found me.”]

St. Paul thanks God, whom he worships according to the manner of his ancestors, that he has a constant remembrance of Timothy in his prayers, that he is mindful of his tears at their parting, or, as some suppose, when he was instructed by St. Paul in the Christian faith—He thanks God also for Timothy’s undissembled faith, which he received from his progenitors—He calls upon him to improve the gifts of the Holy Spirit, by exercising it in defence of the Gospel, at all seasonable occasions—For Christ having given his faithful followers the spirit of courage and wisdom, he ought not to be ashamed of the truth, which is the testimony of Christ; or of St. Paul, his prisoner, (as the Judaizing teachers were,) but become a partaker of the afflictions of the Gospel in proportion to the ability given—God, having saved all mankind from the ruin of sin, has invited them to become his chosen people, according to his free grace and favor, which was ordained from the beginning of the world, but is now made manifest by Jesus Christ, who hath made death ineffectual, by the eternal life of the soul after death, and the incorruption of the body after the resurrection: which things are illustrated in his own person—His divine appointment to the apostleship, that he might instruct the Gentiles in the doctrines of salvation—His past and present persecutions on that account have not shaken his faith in Christ.

St. Paul exhorts Timothy, in the midst of dangers and oppositions, firmly to hold fast the plan of salvation which he had received from him through faith, and love of Christ ; and to keep the Gospel, which is deposited with him, pure, from all false doctrine, by the Holy Spirit within him—He shows the necessity of steadfastness in the faith, by mentioning the defection of many Asiatic Christians, on account of his disgrace and suffering (chap. iv. 16.)—The Apostle prays that Onesiphorus, who still acknowledged him and ministered to him in his prison, might be rewarded for his kindness, and that he may find mercy in the Lord Jesus in the day of judgment—The Apostle exhorts Timothy also to be strong in grace, and to commit those truths which he had received from St. Paul, and which had been confirmed by many witnesses, to men of approved fidelity, who, after his departure, may be able to teach others also—Like a true soldier, he is to keep himself unencumbered by secular occupations, that he may be devoted to the service of Christ ; for if any man contend in the public games, he is not crowned unless he strive according to the prescribed rules—The husbandman must first labor before he can partake of the fruits of the earth ; so also must the Christian minister fulfil his functions in the manner appointed by Christ, and labor in his spiritual vineyard before he receives the promised reward—The Apostle desires him seriously to consider these things, and prays that the Lord will give him understanding in all religious matters.

¹³ HOLD ^a fast ^b the form of ^c sound words, ^d which thou hast heard of me, ^e in faith and love which is in Christ Jesus : ^f ¹⁴ that ^g good thing which was committed unto thee, keep by the Holy Ghost ^h which dwelleth in us. ⁱ ¹⁵ This thou knowest, that ^j all they which are in Asia be ^k turned away from me ; of whom are Phygellus and Hermogenes. ^l ¹⁶ The Lord ^m give mercy unto ⁿ the house of Onesiphorus ; ^o for he oft refreshed me, and ^p was not ashamed of ^q my chain : ^r ¹⁷ but, when he was in Rome, he sought me out very diligently, and found me ; ^s ¹⁸ (the Lord grant unto him ^t that he may find mercy of the Lord ^u in that day !) and in how many things he ^v ministered unto me at Ephesus, thou knowest very well.

§ 4.—chap. ii. 8–13.

The Apostle desires Timothy to remember that the fundamental doctrine on which the Gospel is founded is the resurrection of Jesus in his human form from the dead, contrary to that taught by Hymenæus and Philetus, who preached a figurative resurrection only (ver. 18.)—He is now suffering as a malefactor, in bonds, on account of the Gospel ; but as his enemies cannot bind the Gospel, he patiently endures all things for the sake of the Gentiles, that they may also obtain the blessings of salvation ; for it is certain that those who die with Christ in the flesh will also live with him in glory : that those who suffer with him will reign with him ; but those who through fear deny him, he will deny also at the day of judgment—For though man may be unfaithful, God remains faithful to all his promises and threatenings, and cannot act contrary to himself.

§ 5.—chap. ii. 14–21.

The Apostle commands Timothy to put the Ephesians in mind of these great motives to faithfulness, charging them, as in the presence of Christ, not to contend about words, to become himself a workman approved of God, seasonably distributing the word of truth, resisting all profane and empty declamations which lead to greater impiety, destroying the soul as a gangrene destroys the body—Such are the doctrines of Hymenæus and Philetus, who have greatly erred from the truth, asserting that the resurrection was accomplished when men believed—Notwithstanding these defections, the Church of God being built on the foundation of the apostles (Eph. ii. 20.), their authority stands firm, having this inscription engraven on it (Num. xvi. 5, 26.), implying it was as necessary for the safety of the Ephesians to depart from such iniquitous teachers, as it was for the Israelites to go from the tents of Korah and his companions, if they would avoid their punishment—In a great man's house there are vessels of gold and silver, and wood and earthen ware ; some to honorable, some to a dishonorable use ; so in the House or Church of God, there are teachers of different characters, some engaged in the honorable work of the ministry, others in the dishonorable one of leading men into error—He who cleanses himself from such debasement will become a vessel of honor, consecrated and profitable to God's use, who is Head of the Christian Church.

¹⁴ OF these things put them in remembrance, ^acharging them before the Lord ^bthat they strive not about words to no profit, but to the subverting of the hearers. ¹⁵ Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth. ¹⁶ But ^cshun profane and vain babblings ; for they will increase unto more ungodliness, ¹⁷and their word will eat as doth a ^{*}canker : of whom is ^dHymenæus and Philetus ; ¹⁸ who ^econcerning the truth have erred, ^fsaying, “ That the Resurrection is past already ; ” and overthrow the faith of some. ¹⁹ Nevertheless ^gthe foundation of God standeth [†]sure, having this seal, “ The Lord ^hknoweth them that are his.” And, “ Let every one that nameth the name [of Christ] depart from iniquity.” ²⁰ But ⁱin a great house there are not only vessels of gold and of silver, but also of wood and of earth ; ^jand some to honor, and some to dishonor. ²¹ If ^ka man therefore purge himself from these, he shall be a vessel unto honor, sanctified, and meet for the master's use, and ^lprepared unto every good work.

That Timothy might become a vessel consecrated to the use of God, St. Paul admonishes him to refrain from all youthful passions, the lust of ambition and power, and diligently to pursue righteousness, fidelity, love to God and man, and peace with all, particularly those who have a pure desire to glorify God's name—to reject the foolish notions and practices of the Judaizers—To use no violent methods, to be gentle, practising the virtues he recommends—in meekness instructing opposers, if by God's grace they may be brought to the acknowledgment of the truth—Being taken alive by the servant of God from the snares of the Devil, the errors and sensuality of the Judaizers, that they may be preserved from destruction, and awake from the intoxication of sin, that they may see their danger, and know and do the will of God.

²² FLEE also youthful lusts: but ^afollow righteousness, faith, charity, peace, with them that ^bcall on the Lord ^cout of a pure heart. ²³ But ^dfoolish and unlearned questions avoid, knowing that they do gender strifes: ²⁴ and ^ethe servant of the Lord must not strive; but be gentle unto all men, ^fapt to teach, ^gpatient, ²⁵ in ^hmeekness instructing those that oppose themselves; ⁱif God peradventure will give them repentance ^jto the acknowledging of the truth; ²⁶ and ^kthat they may recover themselves ^lout of the snare of the Devil, who are ^mtaken captive by him at his will.

The Apostle here alludes to the grand apostacy predicted (2 Thess. ii. 3-12. 1 Tim. iv. 1-5.), and describes the pernicious influence of corrupt doctrines on the morals and hearts of men.

§ 8.—chap. iii. 6-9.

St. Paul describes the character of the Judaizing teachers, who by their doctrines were preparing the way for this apostacy, and compares them to Jannes and Jambres, two of Pharaoh's principal magicians, who opposed Moses by false miracles (Exod. vii. 10-22.), in the same way as the former did the Gospel—But the Apostle predicts they shall not be permitted to prevail, or to proceed much further, for their folly, or imposture, shall become as evident as that of the magicians of Egypt.

⁶ FOR ^aof this sort are they which creep into houses, and lead captive silly women, laden with sins, led away with divers lusts, ⁷ever learning, and never able ^bto come to the knowledge of the truth. ⁸ Now ^cas Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses, so do these also resist the truth: ^dmen of corrupt minds, ^ereprobate concerning the faith. ⁹ But they shall proceed no further: for their folly shall be manifest unto all men, ^fas theirs also was.

The Apostle, having shown the character of the wicked Judaizers, declares his own example and doctrine, by which the true doctrine may be as easily ascertained, as in the preceding case of Moses and the magicians—He mentions his persecutions and dangers (Acts xiii. 50-52. ; xiv. 5, 6, 19-21.), from which he had been miraculously preserved; and asserts that all in the apostolic age, who live according to the pure Christian doctrine, will be persecuted—The false teachers will escape by living ungodly, increasing in wickedness, deceiving others and themselves willingly—Timothy is entreated to adhere steadfastly to the Christian doctrines, knowing that he has been instructed in them by an inspired Apostle, and from his earliest infancy had been acquainted with the writings of Moses and the Prophets (Matt. xxii. 29. John v. 39. x. 35.), which, typifying and predicting the great truths of the Gospel, were able to make him wise unto salvation, by confirming him in the faith of Jesus Christ—For the Old Testament is divinely revealed, profitable for teaching the doctrines of the Gospel, for confuting those who should deny them, for correcting erroneous opinions, and for instructing mankind in the nature of the Gospel dispensation (Luke xxiv. 27. 10.—chap. iv. 1-8.

The Apostle, having reminded Timothy of the great advantages he enjoyed, and the duties of the Christian minister, charges him in the presence of God, and as he hopes to appear before the tribunal of Jesus Christ, to be diligent and faithful in his office—to proclaim the doctrine of Christ crucified, at all times and seasons; patiently confuting, rebuking, and comforting, as occasion requires—for in the time of the apostacy they will not endure the practical truths of the Gospel, but will multiply to themselves teachers after their own desires and lusts, turning from the Christian doctrines, to listen to fables and delusions—St. Paul entreats Timothy to be vigilant in opposing the beginnings of these corruptions—Patiently to submit to persecution, and faithfully to discharge all the duties of his ministry, as he himself is soon to be put to death (Philip. ii. 17.)—He is not discouraged, for he has kept the faith of Christ uncorrupted, and expresses his strong confidence that he shall receive the glorious reward at the day of judgment.

⁶ For ^kI am now ready to be offered, and the time of ^lmy departure is at hand. ⁷ I ^mhave fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: ⁸ henceforth there is laid up for me ⁿa crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me ^oat that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing.

The Apostle desires Timothy to come to him, accompanied by Mark the Evangelist—perhaps that they may witness his death, and be confirmed in the faith—He shows that he is now left with only Luke, as Demas hath forsaken him in his extremity, from the fear of persecution—He sends Tychicus to Ephesus, to release Timothy, and desires him to call at Troas—He mentions the opposition of Alexander the copper-smith (Acts xix. 33.), and cautions Timothy against him, as a constant and incorrigible opposer of Christianity (1 Tim. i. 20.)

⁹ Do thy diligence to come shortly unto me : ¹⁰ for ^aDemas hath forsaken me, ^bhaving loved this present world, and is departed unto Thessalonica ; Crescens to Galatia, Titus unto Dalmatia. ¹¹ Only ^cLuke is with me. Take ^dMark, and bring him with thee : for he is profitable to me for the ministry. ¹² And ^eTychicus have I sent to Ephesus. ¹³ The cloak that I left at Troas with Carpus, when thou comest, bring with thee, and the books, but especially the parchments. ¹⁴ Alexander ^fthe coppersmith did me much evil ; ^gthe Lord reward him according to his works : ¹⁵ of whom be thou ware also, for he hath greatly withstood ^hour words.

The Apostle acquaints Timothy that in his first defence he was forsaken by his fellow-laborers through fear—He prays for their forgiveness—but the Lord stood by him, and strengthened him (Luke xxi. 15.) that the Gospel might be fully known, and that all the Gentiles might hear the boldness with which their privileges had been asserted—He was delivered from that great danger (Psalm xxii. 21.)—He does not expect to be delivered on the present occasion—but he feels assured he shall be preserved from betraying his faith and constancy, and that the Lord will bring him into his heavenly kingdom—His doxology is addressed to the Lord Jesus, as a Divine Being.

¹⁶ AT my first answer no man stood with me, “but all men forsook me ; (^b*I pray God* that it may not be laid to their charge !) ¹⁷ notwithstanding ^cthe Lord stood with me, and strengthened me ; ^dthat by me the preaching might be fully known, and that all the Gentiles might hear : and I was delivered ^eout of the mouth of the Lion. ¹⁸ And ^fthe Lord shall deliver me from every evil work, and will preserve me unto his heavenly kingdom : ^gto whom be glory for ever and ever ! Amen.

The Apostle sends his salutations, and repeats his desire that Timothy should come to him speedily—He prays that Jesus Christ may be with his spirit, and ends with his usual benediction.

The Apostle blesses God for the spiritual birth of the Jews and Gentiles to a hope of life after death, through the resurrection of Jesus Christ, that they might partake of an inheritance not to be destroyed—In the hope of this salvation they should greatly rejoice, though grieved with various afflictions, which are necessary for the proving of their faith, the trial of which was more profitable than that of gold, as it procures for them everlasting glory and praise at the coming of Jesus Christ, in whom, though not seen, they greatly rejoice as a Saviour, knowing that they shall receive from him the reward of their faith—the salvation of their souls; which salvation the prophets predicted, diligently searching to ascertain the period of time and people referred to by the Spirit of God, which testified beforehand of the sufferings of Christ, and the glories and blessings which should attend them—To whom also the Holy Spirit revealed that it was not to themselves, but to a people of a future time, that they ministered the things now declared to the world by the apostles, who were endowed for that purpose by the same Holy Spirit, which mysteries the angels, as well as men, desire to contemplate, Exod. xxv. 20.

³ BLESSED ^a be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which ^b according to his ^{*} abundant mercy ^c hath begotten us again unto a lively hope ^d by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, ⁴ to an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, ^e and that fadeth not away, ^f reserved in heaven [†] for you, ⁵ who ^g are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation ready to be revealed in the last time: ⁶ wherein ^h ye greatly rejoice, though now ⁱ for a season, (if need be,) ^j ye are in heaviness through manifold temptations; ⁷ that ^k the trial of your faith, being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though ^l it be tried with fire, ^m might be found unto praise and honor and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ—⁸ whom ⁿ having not seen, ye love; ^o in whom, though now ye see him not, yet believing, ye rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory; ⁹ receiving ^p the end of your faith, even the salvation of your souls. ¹⁰ Of ^q which salvation the prophets have inquired and searched diligently, who prophesied of the grace that should come unto you: ¹¹ searching what, or what manner of time ^r the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, when it testified beforehand ^s the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow: ¹² unto ^t whom it was revealed, that ^u not unto themselves, but unto us they did minister the things, which are now reported unto you by them that have preached the Gospel unto you with ^v the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven; ^w which things the angels desire to look into.

The Apostle calls upon them, from the consideration of the blessings obtained by the sufferings of Christ, to take courage under all their trials, supported to the end of their lives by the hope of eternal life, promised them at the day of the revelation of Christ, avoiding the lusts practised by them in their unconverted state, and imitating the holiness of God, who has called them to be his children, as it is written by Moses (Lev. xix. 2. 1 Pet. v. 10. ii. 21. and iii. 9.)—And as every man will be judged according to his individual works, without distinction of persons, they are admonished to pass the time of their sojourning on earth in religious fear, and so much the more, as they were delivered from the hereditary superstitions and traditions, or vicious rites of worship, they had received from their fathers, by the blood of Christ, as of a sin offering, without blemish, appointed in the divine purpose before the foundation of the world, and typified by the legal sacrifice; but was made manifest in the last, or the Gospel dispensation, to the Gentiles also; who, through faith in the divine mercy, displayed in this sacrifice of Christ, believe in God, who raised him from the dead, and exalted him to celestial glory, that their faith being established in the fulfilment of God's promises, their hope of eternal glory through Christ might be in God.

selves according to the former lusts ^ein your ignorance : ¹⁵ but ^fas He which hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation ; ¹⁶ because it is ^gwritten, “ Be ye holy ; for I am holy.” ¹⁷ And if ye call on the Father, ^hwho without respect of persons judgeth according to every man’s work, ⁱpass the time of your ^jsojourning here in fear : ¹⁸ forasmuch as ye know ^kthat ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and gold, from your vain conversation ^lreceived by tradition from your fathers ; ¹⁹ but ^mwith the precious blood of Christ, ⁿas of a lamb without blemish and without spot : ²⁰ who ^overily was foreordained before the foundation of the world, but was manifest ^pin these last times for you, ²¹ who by him do believe in God ; ^qthat raised him up from the dead, and ^rgave him glory ; that your faith and hope might be in God.

The Apostle exhorts those who have their hearts purified from fleshly lusts by believing in Christ Jesus, to love one another, not in deceitful forms and expressions, but with a pure heart, unmixed with carnal passions, as brethren born again, not by virtue of any descent from human parents, but by a divine and heavenly principle, the doctrine of the living God, which remains for ever.

²² SEEING ye ^ahave purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit unto unfeigned ^blove of the brethren, see that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently ; ²³ being ^cborn again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, ^dby the word of God, which liveth and abideth [for ever]. ²⁴ *For,—

“ All ^eflesh is as grass,

And all the glory of man as the flower of grass.

The grass withereth, and the flower [thereof] falleth away :

²⁵ But ^fthe word of the Lord endureth for ever.”

§ 5.—chap. ii. 1–10.

The Apostle exhorts them to lay aside all the evil dispositions of their former nature, and, as infants born again by divine grace, earnestly to desire the unadulterated milk of the Gospel, that their regenerated nature may be nourished to maturity, seeing they have already tasted the goodness and excellency of the Lord in their second or spiritual birth (Ps. xxxiv. 8.)—To whom coming, by faith, as to a living Foundation-stone, they are built upon him, partaking of his life, so as to make a spiritual temple, forming a company of priests (Exod. xix. 6. Rev. i. 6.), appointed to offer sacrifices of prayer and praise through Christ, according to Isaiah (xxviii. 16.), who has declared that in Sion a chief Corner-stone should be laid, chosen and honorable, for the foundation of the New Temple of God, uniting the two sides of the building, both Jews and Gentiles, in one Church (Eph. ii. 21.)—Those who believe belong to this building ; but to the disobedient it is written (Psalm cxviii. 22.), that this rejected Foundation-stone is become the head of the corner of God’s New Temple, and a stone of stumbling to those who believe not in Christ, against which they shall fall, and be broken, as predicted by Isaiah (viii. 14, 15.)—The Apostle describes the high privileges of Christians, by the titles formerly given to the Jewish Church, to all who were taken into covenant with God.

¹ WHEREFORE ^alaying aside all malice, and all guile, and hypocrisies, and envies, and all evil-speakings, ² as ^bnew-born babes, desire the sincere ^cmilk of the word, that ye may grow thereby : ³ if so be ye have ^dtasted that the Lord is gracious. ⁴ To whom coming, as unto a Living Stone, ^edisallowed indeed of men, but chosen of God, and precious, ⁵ ye ^falso, as lively stones, ^gare built up ^ha spiritual house, ⁱa holy priesthood, to offer up ^jspiritual sacrifices, ^kacceptable to God by Jesus Christ. ⁶ Wherefore also it is contained in the ^lScripture,—

“ Behold, I lay in Sion

A chief Corner-stone, elect, precious :

And he that believeth on Him shall not be confounded.”

§ 6.—chap. ii. 11-17.

The Apostle, in allusion to the Israelites of old (Heb. xi. 13.), calls on them, as strangers and pilgrims (which they literally were in Asia, Pontus, &c.), having no inheritance on earth, to seek for a heavenly country, to abstain from carnal lusts, which bring into captivity or destroy the soul, living in such a manner that the calumnies of their enemies may be confuted by their good works—To submit to every human constitution of government for the Lord's sake, that they may put to silence the ignorance of those foolish men, who asserted that their religion made them averse from subjection to kings and magistrates—As the chosen people of God, the Jews boasted of being freemen, governed by their own laws; in reference to which, the Apostle calls upon them to be governed inwardly by the laws of their religion, but not to use their liberty as a covering for rebellion, as the Jews did, but as the servants of God.

¹¹DEARLY beloved, I beseech you ^aas strangers and pilgrims, ^babstain from fleshly lusts, ^cwhich war against the soul; ¹²having ^dyour conversation honest among the Gentiles: that, ^{*}whereas they speak against you as evil-doers, ^ethey may by your good works, which they shall behold, glorify God ^fin the day of visitation. ¹³Submit ^gyourselves to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake: whether it be to the king, as supreme; ¹⁴or unto governors, as unto them that are sent by him ^hfor the punishment of evil-doers, and ⁱfor the praise of them that do well; ¹⁵(for so is the will of God, that ^jwith well-doing ye may put to silence the ignorance of foolish men:) ¹⁶as ^kfree, and not [†]using your liberty for a cloak of maliciousness, but as ^lthe servants of God. ¹⁷†Honor all men: ^mlove the brotherhood: ⁿfear God: honor the king.

The Apostle exhorts domestic Slaves and Servants to obey their Masters with submission and reverence, even the severe and perverse, not suffering their obedience to depend upon the characters of those they serve—To suffer for well-doing, after the example of Christ, who suffered for them that they might follow in his footsteps—In whom was no sin (Isa. liii. 6.)—Who bore the punishment due to sin, that he might deliver man from its power.

¹⁸SERVANTS, ^abe subject to your masters with all fear; not only to the good and gentle, but also to the froward. ¹⁹For this ^bis ^{*}thank-worthy, if a man for conscience toward God endure grief, suffering wrongfully. ²⁰For ^cwhat glory is it, if, when ye be buffeted for your faults, ye shall take it patiently? but if, when ye do well, and suffer for it, ye take it patiently, this is [†]acceptable with God. ²¹For ^deven hereunto were ye called, because ^eChrist also suffered [†]for us, ^fleaving us an example, that ye should follow his steps: ²²who ^gdid no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth; ²³who, ^hwhen he was reviled, reviled not again; when he suffered, he threatened not; ⁱbut ^{*}committed himself to Him that judgeth righteously; ²⁴who ^jhis own self bare our sins in his own body [†]on the tree, ^kthat we, being dead to sins, should live unto righteousness; ^lby whose stripes ye were healed. ²⁵For ^mye were as sheep going astray; but are now returned ⁿunto the Shepherd and Bishop of your souls.

§ 8.—chap. iii. 1-7.

St Peter proceeds by enforcing on them the higher relative duties—He enjoins Christian wives to submit to their husbands, although they were heathens, that they may gain them over by their holy conduct to the love and practices of the Gospel—To secure their husbands' affection, let them not confine their adorning to their outward persons only, but rather to the inner or hidden soul, after the example of Sara, who acknowledged her subjection to Abraham, by calling him lord, whose daughters they are as long as they act consistently with their Christian character—Christian husbands are commanded to conduct themselves towards their wives as becomes those who have been instructed in the duties of the Christian religion.

§ 9.—chap. iii. 8-17.

The Apostle, in conclusion, exhorts all, married or unmarried, to Christian unity, compassion, and love, returning evil and reproaches with blessings—Acting always according to the dictates of their conscience, that those who falsely speak against them as evil-doers, may be put to shame by their good behaviour in Christ—If the will of God appoint them sufferings, it is better to suffer for doing well, than for doing evil.

¹⁰ For ^fhe that will love life, and see good days,

Let ^ghim refrain his tongue from evil,

And his lips that they speak no guile:

¹¹ Let him ^heschew evil, and do good;

Let ⁱhim seek peace, and ensue it.

¹² For the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous,

And ^jhis ears are open unto their prayers:

But the face of the Lord is against them that do evil.

¹³ And ^kwho is he that will harm you, if ye be followers of that which is good? ¹⁴ But ^land if ye suffer for righteousness' sake, happy are ye! and ^mbe not afraid of their terror, neither be troubled; ¹⁵ but sanctify the LORD God in your hearts.

And ⁿbe ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and ^ofear; ¹⁶ having ^pa good conscience, ^qthat, whereas they speak evil of you, as of evil-doers, they may be ashamed that falsely accuse your good conversation in Christ. ¹⁷ For it is better, if the will of God be so, that ye suffer for well doing, than for evil doing.

§ 10.—chap. iii. 18, to the end.

The Apostle, in a kind of digression, that their sufferings might not be regarded as a token of God's displeasure, encourages them with the consideration of the sufferings of Christ, who, though perfectly righteous, suffered for the sins of others, that he might bring man to God—He was put to death in his human nature, but was made alive again by the Spirit of God; by which Spirit, giving spiritual power to Noah, he preached to those spirits which were now shut up or reserved, as it were, in prison under the divine justice, to receive the punishment due to their sins—The long-suffering of God delayed 120 years, to see if they would repent and be saved, while the ark was preparing (Gen. vi. 3.), when the family of Noah, who believed, was saved by water, which was a figure of the salvation of the family of Christ, in the ark of the Church, by the waters of baptism, by which they are admitted into a new state of being, and saved from the grave, through the resurrection of Jesus Christ; who having gone into heaven, angels and every denomination of beings, both in heaven and earth, are subjected to him, that he may bestow salvation on all who believe in him.

¹⁸ FOR Christ also hath ^aonce suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God: ^bbeing put to death ^cin the flesh, but ^dquickened by the Spirit; ¹⁹ by which also he went and ^epreached unto the spirits ^fin prison; ²⁰ which sometime were disobedient, ^gwhen once the long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while ^hthe ark was a preparing, ⁱwherein few (that is eight) souls were saved by water. ²¹ The ^jlike figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us, ^a(not the putting away of ^kthe filth of the flesh, ^lbut the answer of a good conscience toward God), ^mby the resurrection of Jesus Christ: ²² who is gone into heaven, and ⁿis on the right hand of God; ^oangels and authorities and powers being made subject unto him.

Christ having suffered a painful death in the flesh for man, the Apostle calls upon them to crucify also the flesh, for they that have mortified the flesh have ceased, or are dead to sin, living the remainder of their lives not according to its lusts, but agreeably to the will of God—For too much of their past life has been passed in the shameful abominations and vices to which the Gentiles were addicted, who are now astonished, and calumniate them for not continuing in the same profusion of riot, forgetting they are accountable to him who will judge both the righteous and the wicked—For which cause the Gospel was preached to the Gentiles, who were dead in trespasses and sins, that those who believed might be judged or condemned by men who are governed by the flesh, although they live according to the will of God in the spirit.

The Apostle comforts them with the assurance that the power of their bitter persecutors would soon be destroyed, in the approaching destruction of the Jewish people and polity, and admonishes them, that they may be saved from it to watchfulness against all impurity, and to prayer; having fervent love, which leads to bearing or blotting out the faults of each other; and in this time of persecution to be hospitable one to another, not regarding the inconvenience, every man ministering according to the gifts or providence and grace which he may have received from the Lord—If any discourse on God's word, let him do so according to the oracles of God—If any minister to the necessities of the poor, let him do so as of the means which God has bestowed on him, giving God the glory through Jesus Christ.

pitality one to another, ^fwithout grudging. ¹⁰ As ^gevery man hath received the gift, even so minister the same one to another, ^has good stewards of ⁱthe manifold grace of God. ¹¹ If ^jany man speak, let him speak as the Oracles of God; ^kif any man minister, let him do it as of the ability which God giveth. That ^lGod in all things may be glorified through Jesus Christ; ^mto whom be praise and dominion for ever and ever! Amen.

The Apostle cautions the Christians not to be surprised at the calamities and persecutions coming upon them, which were intended as the trials of their faith; but rather to rejoice, as by them they are made partakers of the sufferings of Christ, that they may be glorified with him—They are happy who are reproached for being Christians, for the Divine Spirit, which rested on Jesus, rests also on them: by their persecutors Christ is blasphemed, but by their sufferings he is honored—On which account he admonishes them not to suffer for any crime of their own (mentioning those to which the unbelieving Jews were addicted), which brings neither glory nor reward—But if any suffer for being a Christian, let him not be ashamed, however ignominious the punishment, but let him rather glorify the Lord, who also suffered for being holy—The time is now come for the punishment of the Jews as a nation, which is to begin at the house of God (John xvi. 2. Matt. xxiii. 35. Ezek. ix. 6.); and if it begin first with the believing Jews, what fearful destruction will come upon those who obey not the Gospel!—And if Christians shall, with extreme difficulty, escape from the judgment of God on Jerusalem, how shall the ungodly and sinners hope for deliverance?—the Apostle enjoins Gentiles as well as Jews, who suffer for righteousness' sake, to commit their lives to God as to a faithful Creator, who will regard them as his creatures and children, giving them eternal life, if they continue in well-doing.

¹² BELOVED, think it not strange concerning ^athe fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you: ¹³but ^brejoice, inasmuch as ^cye are partakers of Christ's sufferings; ^dthat, when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy. ¹⁴ If ^eye be reproached for the name of Christ, happy are ye! for the Spirit of Glory and of God resteth upon you: ^fon their part he is evil spoken of, but on your part he is glorified. ¹⁵ But ^glet none of you suffer as a murderer, or as a thief, or as an evil-doer, ^hor as a busy-body in other men's matters: ¹⁶ yet if any man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed; ⁱbut let him glorify God on this behalf. ¹⁷ For the time is come ^jthat judgment must begin at the House of God: and ^kif it first begin at us, ^lwhat shall the end be of them that obey not the Gospel of God! ¹⁸ And ^mif the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear! ¹⁹ Wherefore, let them that suffer according to the will of God ⁿcommit the keeping of their souls to Him in well doing, as unto a faithful Creator.

The Apostle exhorts the elders, as one who was an eyewitness of the sufferings of Christ (in the garden, at his apprehension, and in the high priest's hall), and a beholder and partaker of the glory of the Transfiguration, faithfully to feed the flock of Christ, discharging the office of bishops, or superintendents, in these times of persecution, not by reason of importunity, but willingly; not for the sake of a maintenance, but with an active desire to promote the glory of God—Not lording it over the flocks, which are the heritage of God, but being to them ensamples of humility and every Christian grace—And when the Chief Shepherd shall appear, to whom the flocks belong, they who have discharged their duties shall receive from him a crown of glory.

The Apostle commands those who hold inferior offices in the Church to submit to the elders, and then calls on them all indiscriminately to be subject, or to strive and serve each other in the relative situation in which they stand, to be clothed, guarded, and protected by humility—As God opposes himself to the proud, they should humble themselves, and patiently submit to his dispensations under every danger and affliction, casting all their anxiety on God, who interests himself for them (Ps. lv. 22.), being anxious only for the government of their passions, temperate, and always watchful over themselves, because their spiritual adversary is going about in this time of their trials and calamities, seeking whom he may swallow down, hoping to make them apostatize ; whom they must stand against, steadfast in the faith of the Son of God, knowing that it is the portion of Christ's disciples to suffer persecution from men and devils—The Apostle prays to God to strengthen and to make them perfect in the faith of Christ.

⁵ LIKEWISE, ye younger, submit yourselves unto the elder : yea, ^aall of you be subject one to another, and be clothed with humility ; for ^bGod resisteth the proud, and ^cgiveth grace to the humble. ⁶ Humble ^dyourselves therefore under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time. ⁷ Casting ^eall your care upon Him ; for He careth for you. ⁸ Be ^fsober, be vigilant ; because ^gyour adversary, the Devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking whom he may devour : ⁹ whom ^hresist steadfast in the faith, ⁱknowing that the same afflictions are accomplished in your brethren that are in the world.

¹⁰ But the God of all grace, ^jwho hath called us unto his eternal glory by Christ Jesus, after that ye have suffered ^ka while, ^lmake you perfect, ^mstablish, strengthen, settle you. ¹¹ To ⁿHim be glory and dominion for ever and ever ! Amen.

The Apostle informs them that he sends this Epistle by Silvanus (the same as Silas, Acts xv. 40. and xvi. 19.), he writes to them as he considers briefly, testifying to them that it is the genuine Gospel of Christ which has been preached—He desires them to salute each other, in testimony of their Christian love, and concludes with his apostolical benediction.

¹² BY ^aSilvanus, a faithful brother unto you, as I suppose, I have ^bwritten briefly, exhorting, and testifying ^cthat this is the true grace of God wherein ye stand. ¹³ The church that is at Babylon, elected together with you, saluteth you ; and so doth ^dMarcus my son. ¹⁴ Greet ^eye one another with a kiss of charity. ^fPeace be with you all that are in Christ Jesus ! [Amen.]

[END OF THE FIRST EPISTLE GENERAL OF PETER.]

SECTION XIV.—St. Peter, under the impression of approaching Martyrdom, writes to the Jewish and Gentile Christians, dispersed in the Countries of Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, &c., to confirm the Doctrines and Instructions of his former Letter, to caution them against the Errors of the false Teachers, by reminding them of the Judgments of God on Apostates, and to encourage them under Persecution, by the Consideration of the happy Deliverance of those who trusted in him, and the final Dissolution both of this World and of the Jewish Dispensation.^b

THE SECOND EPISTLE GENERAL OF PETER.

The Apostle's address and benediction—He is commissioned an apostle both to Jews and Gentiles, by Jesus Christ, who has endowed the apostles with divine power by the gifts of the Holy Spirit, to enable them to bring men to a godly life, which is obtained through the knowledge of Christ Jesus (John xvii. 3.), who has called them to the glory of being his apostles, and infused into them strengthening energy and courage for that purpose, committing to them all the glorious promises of the Gospel, that man might become again a partaker of the holy and immortal nature, having escaped the corruption of the world through lust—To join to their faith true fortitude and resolution of mind under persecution, with increasing knowledge of the doctrines of Christ—And to knowledge, moderation in all earthly enjoyments, patience under afflictions, and piety towards God—And to piety, love of their Christian brethren; and to love of the brethren, love to all men, not excepting their enemies—If these things abound in them, they will be neither inactive nor unfruitful in good works—But he who is deficient in good works, and active Christian graces, is wilfully blind, shutting his eyes against the light, assuming a forgetfulness of his baptismal vow to purify himself from his old sins—Seeing that this is the case with many, they are exhorted more earnestly to labor, to make sure their calling and election by the Gospel, to be the sons of God and his Church, by doing good works through faith; which things if they practise, God will support them by his grace, and minister to them an honorable and triumphant entrance into his everlasting kingdom.

¹ *SIMON PETER, a servant and an apostle of Jesus Christ, to them that have obtained ^alike precious faith with us through the righteousness of God and our Saviour Jesus Christ! ² grace ^band peace be multiplied unto you through the knowledge of God, and of Jesus our Lord!

³ According as his divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, ^cthrough the knowledge of Him ^dthat hath called us to glory and virtue; ⁴ (whereby ^eare given unto us exceeding great and precious promises; that by these ye might be ^fpartakers of the Divine Nature, ^ghaving escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust;) ⁵ and beside this, ^hgiving all diligence, add to your faith virtue; and to virtue ⁱknowledge; ⁶ and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; ⁷ and to godliness brotherly kindness; and ^jto brotherly kindness charity. ⁸ For if these things be in you, and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be ^kbarren ^lnor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ; ⁹ but he that lacketh these things ^mis blind, and cannot see afar off, and hath forgotten that he was ⁿpurged from his old sins. ¹⁰ Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence ^oto make your calling and election sure: for if ye do these things, ^pye shall never fall. ¹¹ For so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

As the practice of Christian virtues through faith is the only way by which they can enter into Christ's kingdom, St. Peter declares that he thinks it suitable to his apostleship, as long as he is in the body, to remind them of these truths, in which they are already established, and to stir them up to the practice of them; and knowing that his death is soon to take place (John xxi. 18, 19.), he endeavours, by thus writing to them, to enable them to have these things, after his going out of the body, always in their remembrance—For they did not publish cunningly-devised fables, after the manner of the heathen, concerning the appearance of their gods on earth in the human form, when they made known to them the power and the appearance of Jesus Christ; whose majesty he himself, with James and John, witnessed in the Holy Mount, when God, from his magnificent glory, declared him to be his Son; which voice, and the Transfiguration of his person, confirmed the prophecies of the Old Testament concerning Christ, to which they are to pay attention, as the light that guided mankind, during their state of spiritual ignorance, till the day of the Gospel should dawn, and the morning-star of righteousness arise in their souls—Knowing that no prophecy is of private impulse or invention; for prophecy was not brought of old to the minds of those that uttered it by the will of man; but holy men of God declared the purposes of his will as they were borne on or inspired by the Holy Ghost.

¹² WHEREFORE ^aI will not be negligent to put you always in remembrance of these things, ^bthough ye know them, and be established in the present truth. ¹³ Yea, I think it meet, ^cas long as I am in this tabernacle, ^dto stir you up by putting you in remembrance; ¹⁴ knowing ^ethat shortly I must put off this my tabernacle, even as ^four Lord Jesus Christ hath showed me. ¹⁵ Moreover I will endeavour that ye may be always able after my decease to have these things in remembrance. ¹⁶ For we have not followed ^ecunningly-devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but ^hwere eyewitnesses of his^d Majesty. ¹⁷ For he received from God the Father honor and glory, when there came such a Voice to him from the Excellent Glory, "This ⁱis my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." ¹⁸ And this Voice which came from heaven we heard, when we were with him in ^jthe Holy Mount: ¹⁹ we have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto ^ka light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and ^lthe day-star arise in your hearts: ²⁰ knowing this first, that ^mno prophecy of the Scripture is of any private^e interpretation. ²¹ For ⁿthe prophecy came not ^{*}in old time by the will of man; ^obut holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost.

The Apostle foretells, that as there were false prophets among the Jews who perverted many, denying God, who had redeemed them from the bondage of Egypt, so there shall be false teachers in the Christian Church, who will covertly introduce their heresies of destruction, denying the Lord who had bought them from the bondage of sin and death with his blood (Exod. xv. 16. Deut. xxxii. 6.), bringing on themselves destruction—They will be followed by many, who by their vicious lives will cause the Gospel to be blasphemed, making a merchandise of souls, whose punishment, denounced from the beginning against sin, lingers not, but will soon overtake them—For God spared not the angels who sinned, but cast them down to hell, confining them, till the day of judgment, in a place of wretchedness and darkness, from which they could not escape; and spared not the old world, nor the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah, but made them an example of the punishment to be inflicted on the ungodly at the last day—From the miraculous deliverance of Noah and Lot, the Apostle proves that God would as surely deliver from trials and dangers those who trust in Him, and are his faithful servants, as He would destroy with an everlasting destruction the false teachers and the disobedient.

¹ BUT ^athere were false prophets also among the people, even as ^bthere shall be false teachers among you, who privily shall bring in damnable heresies, even ^cdenying the Lord ^dthat bought them, ^eand bring upon themselves swift destruction: ² and many shall follow their ^{*}pernicious ways, (by reason of whom the way of truth shall be evil spoken of;) ³ and ^fthrough covetousness shall they with feigned words ^gmake merchandise of you: ^hwhose judgment now of a long time lingereth not, and their damnation slumbereth not. ⁴ For if God spared not ⁱthe angels ^jthat sinned, but ^kcast them down to hell, and delivered them into chains of darkness, to be reserved unto judgment; ⁵ and spared not the old world, but saved ^lNoah the eighth person, ^ma preacher of righteousness, ⁿbringing in the flood upon the world of the ungodly; ⁶ and ^oturning the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah into ashes condemned them with an overthrow, ^pmaking them an ensample unto those that after should live ungodly; ⁷ and ^qdelivered just Lot, vexed with the filthy conversation of the wicked, ⁸ (for ^rthat righteous man, dwelling among them, ^sin seeing and hearing vexed his righteous soul from day to day with their unlawful deeds;) ⁹ [then] the ^tLord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptations, and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished; ¹⁰ but chiefly ^uthem that walk after the flesh in the lust of uncleanness, and despise [†]government.

The Apostle describes the character of the false teachers, who, like brute beasts, following the instinct of their animal nature, made to be taken and destroyed on account of their destructiveness, blaspheming what they do not understand, shall perish in their own corrupt doctrines and practices—They make an open display of their vices—They are guilty of sensuality at their love-feasts—They beguile souls not established in the faith, with the idea that the Lord's Supper was instituted to promote carnal love, and are expert in all the arts of seduction and fraud—Following in the way of Balaam, who (Numb. xxxi. 16. Rev. ii. 14.) acted contrary to his knowledge and conscience, that he might obtain the promised hire of unrighteousness.

¹⁰ PRESUMPTUOUS ^aare they self-willed, they are not afraid to speak evil of dignities; ¹¹ whereas ^bangels, which are greater in power and might, bring not railing accusation ^{*}against them before the Lord. ¹² But these (as ^cnatural brute beasts, made to be taken and destroyed) speak evil of the things that they understand not; and shall utterly perish in their own corruption; ¹³ and ^dshall receive the reward of unrighteousness. As they that count it pleasure ^eto riot in the day time, (^fspots they are and blemishes!) sporting themselves with their own deceivings while ^gthey feast with you; ¹⁴ having eyes full of adultery, and that cannot cease from sin; beguiling unstable souls: ^ha heart they have exercised with covetous practices: cursed children! ¹⁵ which have forsaken the right way, and are gone astray, following the way of ⁱBalaam the son of Bosor, who loved the wages of unrighteousness; ¹⁶ but was rebuked for his iniquity—the dumb ass speaking with man's voice forbad the madness of the prophet.

§ 5.—chap. ii. 17, to the end.

The Apostle compares the false teachers to wells without water, to clouds which promise rain, but, ending in a tempest, destroy instead of fulfilling the expectations of man, who, by permitting all kinds of lasciviousness, allure those to become their disciples, who had separated themselves from the heathens—They promised the liberty of gratifying their lusts without restraint, while their own conduct proved them the slaves of corruption—For he who is overcome by his lusts is by them enslaved—To those who have been converted by the knowledge of the Gospel from the idolatry and lasciviousness of the heathen world, and are again entangled with them, their latter pollutions will be more fatal than the first; for they have sinned against greater spiritual light and privileges.

The Apostle shows that his design in writing his two Epistles was to remind them of the predictions of the ancient Prophets (Dan. xii. 2.), and of the doctrines and instructions of the apostles founded on them, knowing that the Prophets foretold the appearance of false teachers, who should deny the coming of Christ to judge the world (Jer. xvii. 15. Ezek. xii. 22-27. Jude 14, 15. Dan. xii. 2.), wilfully ignorant that the firmament, or atmosphere, and the earth, were formed by the word of God out of water; by means of which, owing to the wickedness of man, it had been already destroyed—That the present earth and its atmosphere, which exist by the same means, are liable to the same destruction from the same cause; but they are treasured up, and preserved from a deluge of water, that they may be consumed by a deluge of fire, at the day of retribution and judgment.

⁵ For this they willingly are ignorant of, that, ^fby the word of God, the heavens were of old, and the earth ^gstanding ^hout of the water and in the water ; ⁶ whereby ⁱthe world that then was, being overflowed with water, perished : ⁷ but ^jthe heavens and the earth, which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto ^kfire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men.

The Apostle exhorts the Christian brethren not to be deceived by the scoffers, who inferred from God's delay that he wanted the power or the inclination to fulfil his promises—but to remember that no finite duration bears any proportion to the eternity of God ;—that no period of time can change his purposes (Psalm xc. 4.)—That the coming of the Lord is not delayed for the reason assigned by these teachers ; but from his long-suffering, and unwillingness that any should perish—The day of the Lord, however delayed, will surely and suddenly come, and will break in upon men as a thief in the night (Matt. xxiv. 43.), when the whole atmosphere, with its vapors, shall pass away by the application of fire, with tremendous noise and explosions, and the elements of which they are composed being ignited and separated, the whole material fabric, with all its works of nature and art, shall be utterly burned—Seeing that all earthly things shall be dissolved, they have the most powerful incentives to holiness of life, and piety towards God ; earnestly desiring, instead of fearing, the coming of the day of God, when this mundane system shall be melted ; for they, according to the promise God made to Abraham and to his spiritual seed (Rom. iv. 13–16. Isa. lxxv. 17–23. and lxxvi. 22.) are to look for new heavens and a new earth (Rev. xx. 11. and xxi. 1.), the endless abode of blessed spirits.

⁸ BUT, beloved, be not ignorant of this one thing, that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and ^aa thousand years as one day. ⁹ The ^bLord is not slack concerning his promise, as some men count slackness ; but ^cis long-suffering to us-ward, ^dnot willing that any should perish, but ^ethat all should come to repentance. ¹⁰ But ^fthe day of the Lord will come as a thief [in the night] ; in the which ^gthe heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat ; the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up.

¹¹ Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be ^hin all holy conversation and godliness ! ¹² looking ⁱfor and ^jhasting unto the coming of the day of God, wherein the heavens being on fire shall ^kbe dissolved, and the elements shall ^lmelt with fervent heat. ¹³ Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for ^mnew heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness.

As all Christians are promised the inheritance of the everlasting Canaan, the new heavens and the new earth (Luke xx. 35.), the Apostle admonishes them earnestly to endeavour to be found of Christ, the Judge of quick and dead, holy, innocent, and useful in their lives, and at peace with him—They are to consider the delay of his coming as a proof of his design that all men should be saved ; as Paul, by divine inspiration, has written to them (Ephes. ii. 3–5. Coloss. i. 21. 1 Thess. iii. 13. iv. 14–18. 2 Thess. i. 7–10. Titus ii. 13.)—Resurrection of the dead (1 Cor. xv. 22. Phil. iii. 20, 21.)—Burning of the earth (2 Thess. i. 8.)—Heavenly country, abode of the righteous (1 Thess. iv. 17. Heb. iv. 9. and xii. 14, 18, 24.)—General Judgment (Rom. xiv. 10.), among which things some are difficult of comprehension to man, which the unlearned and unestablished in the faith distort, with other portions of Scripture, to their own destruction—corrupting the morals of men—But they, having been forewarned by the apostles and prophets of these erroneous doctrines, are to be on their guard against them, daily increasing in the knowledge of the doctrines of Jesus Christ, and as rendering glory to him now, and to the day of eternity.

¹⁴ WHEREFORE, beloved, seeing that ye look for such things, ^abe diligent that ye may be found of him in peace, without spot, and blameless, ¹⁵and account that ^bthe long-suffering of our Lord is salvation; even as our beloved brother Paul also, according to the wisdom given unto him, hath written unto you; ¹⁶as also in all his Epistles, ^cspeaking in them of these things: in which are some things hard to be understood, which they that are unlearned and unstable wrest, as they do also the other Scriptures, unto their own destruction.

¹⁷Ye therefore, beloved, ^dseeing ye know these things before, ^ebe-ware! lest ye also, being led away with the error of the wicked, fall from your own steadfastness: ¹⁸but ^fgrow in grace, and in the knowl-edge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. ^gTo him be glory both now and for ever! Amen.

SECTION XV.—Jude writes his Epistle to caution the Christian Church against the dangerous Tenets of the false Teachers, who had now appeared, subverting the Doctrine of Grace to the encouragement of Licentiousness—and to exhort them to a steadfast Adherence to the Faith, and to Holiness of Life.^f

The Apostle addresses his Epistle to all who are called and preserved and consecrated to God through faith in Jesus Christ—His benediction.

The Apostle, having heard of the pernicious doctrines of the false teachers, exhorts Christians strenuously to contend for the faith which had been delivered to the apostles and prophets by Jesus Christ through the Spirit—For some ungodly men had crept into the Church, who taught that the goodness of God was so great, that men might sin with impunity, if they possessed faith, denying both the Father and Son (1 John ii. 22.), whose condemnation was foretold by the divine Law from the very beginning—To confute these dangerous doctrines, the Apostle reminds them of the punishment inflicted even on the chosen people of God for their sins (compare Numb. xiv. 23. with Heb. iii. 18, 19.), of that reserved for the angels, who, discontented with their station, attempted to advance themselves, leaving their assigned habitations, and of the utter and eternal destruction of the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah—He shows that these false teachers, and their followers, by the same sins of unbelief, disobedience, and licentiousness, will bring upon themselves the same punishment—these blaspheme, or revile, all established authority; although Michael, the archangel, so much greater than they, did not bring a railing accusation even against the Devil, but left him to the judgment of God—They revile laws and magistrates, not knowing their use and origin; are governed as brute beasts by instinct, destroying themselves by the indulgence of their animal propensities—They have followed after the example of Cain, destroying the souls of their brethren—Of Balaam, by corrupting the word of God for gain—Of Korah and his party, by opposing the apostles and ministers of Christ, as they did Moses and Aaron; and they shall as surely perish, as Korah and his associates did.

godly men, turning the grace of our God into lasciviousness, and denying the only Lord [God], and our Lord Jesus Christ.

⁸ Likewise ⁿalso these filthy dreamers defile the flesh, despise dominion, and ^ospeak evil of dignities. ⁹ Yet ^pMichael the archangel, when contending with the Devil he disputed about the body of Moses, ^qdurst not bring against him a railing accusation, ^sbut ^rsaid, "The Lord rebuke thee!" ¹⁰ But ^tthese speak evil of those things which they know not: but what they know naturally, as brute beasts, in those things they corrupt themselves. ¹¹ Woe unto them! for they have gone in the way of Cain, and ^uran greedily after the error of Balaam for reward, and perished ^vin the gainsaying of Core.^h

The Apostle tells the Christians that these teachers are a disgrace to their love-feasts, pampering their appetites—He compares them to clouds without water (Deut. xxxii. 2.), their office promising good doctrine, yet giving none; carried about by their passions; so diseased themselves, that their doctrines must be corrupt; naturally and spiritually dead; rooted out as barren; fierce and violent, as the waves of the sea, foaming out their own wickedness; unsettled and irregular in their conduct (Rev. i. 16. and ii. 1.), and being destitute of light, they are reserved for eternal darkness; against whom also (according to the ancient tradition) Enoch the seventh from Adam (to distinguish him from Enoch the son of Cain, who was the third) prophesied, when he predicted the condemnation of the wicked in his own time, and their destruction by the deluge—For these false teachers, like the antediluvians, murmur at the allotments of Providence and the restraints imposed on them; but they are also proud and rebellious, flattering men for their own gain.

¹² THESE ^aare spots in your ^bfeasts of charity, when they feast with you without fear, feeding themselves; ^cclouds they are without water, ^dcarried about of winds; trees whose fruit withereth, without fruit, twice dead, ^eplucked up by the roots; ¹³raging ^fwaves of the sea, ^gfoaming out their own shame; wandering stars, ^hto whom is reserved the blackness of darkness for ever. ¹⁴ And Enoch also, ⁱthe seventh from Adam, prophesiedⁱ of these, ^jsaying,— "Behold! the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints,

And to convince all that are ungodly among them

Of all their ungodly deeds which they have ungodly committed,

And of all their ^khard speeches

Which ungodly sinners have spoken against him."

The Apostle exhorts them, instead of following the false teachers, to remember the doctrines taught them by the apostles, who had also foretold the coming of these lascivious scoffers (2 Pet. iii. 2.), who, separating themselves from the true disciples of Christ, on the pretence of greater illumination, are mere animal men, not having the Spirit—But Christians are to establish themselves and each other in the doctrines of Christ and the Apostles, which make men spiritual and holy, praying to God under the influence of the Holy Ghost, keeping themselves in constant love towards God, expecting pardon from Christ, together with eternal life—They are to make a difference between those who have been seduced by ignorance and weakness, and those who have erred from pride and corruption of heart—They are gently to reprove the former, and save others from the destruction of sin, by the power of terror, retaining the greatest hatred of their sins, lest they also should be infected by them.

¹⁷ BUT, ^abeloved, remember ye the words which were spoken before of the apostles of our Lord Jesus Christ; ¹⁸ how that they told you ^bthere should be mockers in the last time, who should walk after their own ungodly lusts.

¹⁹ These be they ^cwho separate themselves, ^dsensual, having not the Spirit. ²⁰ But ye, beloved, ^ebuilding up yourselves on your most holy faith, ^fpraying in the Holy Ghost, ²¹ keep yourselves in the love of God, ^glooking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life. ²² And of some have compassion, making a difference; ²³ and others ^hsave with fear, ⁱpulling them out of the fire; hating even ^jthe garment spotted by the flesh.

[END OF THE GENERAL EPISTLE OF JUDE.]

SECTION XVI.—Martyrdom of St. Peter and St. Paul.

[As the Scripture is silent with respect to the martyrdom of St. Peter at Rome, many Protestant writers, Salmasius, Spanheim, Dr. Barrow, with Bishop Marsh, in his Comparative View of the Churches of England and Rome, have endeavoured to prove that St. Peter was never in that city. Upon this point we have already made some observations; the evidence from the fathers is too decisive to permit us to suppose there was no foundation for the general tradition that he was martyred in that city; neither are we even justified in attempting to weaken that evidence of the fathers, which we are willing to receive in other instances, when it confirms our opinions. The arrogant claims of the Church of Rome, that the bishop of that city is entitled, as the successor of St. Peter, to a spiritual supremacy over the other Churches and bishops of the Christian world, has not the shadow of support in Scripture, nor any solid foundation among the fathers of the three first centuries; as the learned ornament of the English Church, Bishop Jewell, has abundantly demonstrated. It cannot then be necessary to reject the authority of early ecclesiastical history, because its testimony has been perverted by a corrupt and apostate Church. The original authorities, upon which the belief that St. Peter was martyred at Rome about this time, are given at length by Dr. Hales. They are selected from Eusebius, and references are given to Dr. Lardner, wherever the passages had been previously selected by that theologian. He quotes Clemens Romanus, Epist. 1. ad Corinth. sect. 5.—Cotelerius, Patres Apost. vol. i. p. 148—Dionysius, bishop of Corinth—Euseb. *Eccles. SECT. XVI.

V. Æ. 66.

J. P. 4779.
Rome.

vol. i. p. 148. Not. 39—the united testimony of which is amply sufficient to warrant our reception of the general tradition, which is well given by Cave.

Some circumstances are related which are not supported by the best authorities, and which have too much the appearance of legendary fable. Our Lord, it is said, appeared to St. Peter as he was making his escape over the walls of Rome, at the request of the disciples, and told the Apostle that he was coming to Rome to be again crucified. St. Peter understood this as a reproof, and returned to prison and to death. The stone on which our Lord stood when he talked with St. Peter, bore, it is added, the impression of his feet, and has ever since been preserved as a sacred relic; it is still in the Church of St. Sebastian the Martyr.

Omitting all such narratives, there is sufficient evidence to induce us to receive the common opinion, that, having saluted his brethren, and taken his farewell of St. Paul, he was brought out of prison, and led to the top of the Vatican mount, where he was to be crucified. On his arrival there, he entreated the favor of the officers, that he might not be crucified in the usual manner, but with his head downwards, for he was unworthy to suffer in the same manner, in which our Lord had suffered.

There is sufficient traditionary evidence also, to render it highly probable that the anticipations of St. Paul were realized, and that he was sacrificed in the reign of Nero. Three of the soldiers who conducted him to execution are said to have been converted by his discourse, and became themselves martyrs for the faith. He was beheaded with a sword, crucifixion being esteemed a death too disgraceful for a Roman citizen. Some have asserted that he suffered on the same day with St. Peter; others, that he was executed the year after; others, that several years elapsed before his death. Bishop Pearson is of opinion that St. Paul was martyred during the absence of Nero in Greece, when the command of the pretorian guards was left to Tigellinus, and the government of the empire to Helius Cæsarianus, one of the most profligate and abandoned men of that wicked age. Clemens Romanus affirms, that St. Paul suffered death under the governors, and not under Nero; and Bishop Pearson places the utmost confidence in his testimony.

Cave quotes in confirmation of the tradition concerning St. Peter, Orig. lib. iii. in Genes. apud Euseb. Hist. Eccles. lib. iii. c. i. p. 71; Hieron. de Script. Ecel. in Petr. p. 262; Heges. p. 279; Prudent. Peristeph. Hymn. xi. in Pass. Petri, et Pauli; and Chrysostom, Serm. in Petr. et Pauli, p. 267, t. 6, and an equal number respecting St. Paul—See his Lives of the Apostles, and the Account in Dr. Lardner's Supplement to the Credibility.

As our Lord's prediction concerning the death of St. Peter is recorded in one of the four Gospels, it is very likely that Christians would observe the accomplishment of it, which must have been in some place; and, among Christian writers of ancient times, no other place was named beside Rome; nor did any other city ever glory in the martyrdom of St. Peter. There were in the second and third centuries disputes between the bishop of Rome and other bishops and Churches, about the time of keeping Easter, and about the baptism of heretics, yet none denied the bishop of Rome to have what they called the chair of St. Peter.

Eusebius, both in his Demonstration and in his Ecclesiastical History, bears witness to the same things—not now to insist on his Chronicle. In the former he says, “that St. Peter was crucified at Rome, with his head downwards, and St. Paul beheaded.” In his Ecclesiastical History, speaking of Nero as the first persecutor of the Christians, he says, “that he put to death the apostles, at which time St. Paul was beheaded at Rome, and St. Peter crucified, as history relates. And the account,” he says, “is confirmed by the monuments still seen in the cemeteries of that city, with their names inscribed upon them.” And in another chapter of the same work he says, “that Linus was the first bishop of Rome after the martyrdom of Paul and Peter.” It is needless to refer to any more of the many places of this learned bishop of Cæsarea, where he appears to have been fully persuaded, that these two Apostles accomplished their martyrdom at Rome.]

SECTION XVII.—Destruction of Jerusalem.

Jerusalem.

[OUR Lord had solemnly declared, “All manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men, but the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost shall not be forgiven in this world,” &c. The expression, “in this world,” may possibly refer to the destruction of Jerusalem. After the ascension of Christ, the Jews lived under the miraculous dispensation of the Holy Spirit, which constantly appealed to them by miracles and by prophecy, as it had occasionally done among their fathers. They persevered, however, for forty years, wilfully and obstinately rejecting the truth of God, till the prediction of their rejected Messiah was fulfilled, and wrath came upon them to the uttermost. The accounts which are given to us by Josephus of the dreadful devastation of their country, the famine and bloodshed, the distress and total ruin of the whole nation, by which the prophecies of Moses and Christ were fulfilled, are so familiar, that it cannot be necessary to enter into the narrative. The fall of Jerusalem has left this memorable lesson to the world—that nations and churches, however highly they may have been favored by the protecting providence of God, will assuredly be laid aside, and fall from their political greatness, if they neglect the service and obedience of Him by whom kings reign, and empires flourish or decay.

¹ THE REVELATION of Jesus Christ, ^awhich God gave unto him, to show unto his servants things which ^bmust shortly come to pass; and ^cHe sent and signified it by his angel unto his servant John: ² who ^dbare record of the word of God, and of the testimony of Jesus Christ, and of all things ^ethat he saw. ³ Blessed ^fis he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things which are written therein: for ^gthe time is at hand.

§ 2.—chap. i. 4-8.

St. John salutes the Churches, and asserts the Deity of their Saviour, who should come to judge the world.

⁴ JOHN to the Seven Churches which are in Asia! Grace be unto you, and peace, from Him ^awhich is, and ^bwhich was, and which is to come; ^cand from the Seven Spirits which are before his throne; ⁵ and from Jesus Christ, ^dwho is the Faithful Witness, and the ^eFirst-begotten of the dead, and ^fthe Prince of the kings of the earth! Unto Him ^gthat loved us, ^hand washed us from our sins in his own blood, ⁶ and hath ⁱmade us kings and priests unto God and his Father; ^jto him be glory and dominion for ever and ever! Amen. ⁷ Behold! ^kHe cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see Him, and ^lthey also which pierced Him: and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of Him. Even so, Amen. ⁸ I ^mam Alpha and Omega, [The Beginning and The Ending,] saith the Lord, ⁿwhich is, and which was, and which is to come, The Almighty.

§ 3.—chap. i. 9, to the end.

St. John relates the appearance of Christ to him in the Isle of Patmos, and his prophetic commission.

⁹ I JOHN (who also am your brother, and ^acompanion in tribulation, and ^bin the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ), was in the isle that is called Patmos, ^cfor the word of God, and for the testimony of Jesus [Christ]. ¹⁰ I ^dwas in the Spirit on ^ethe Lord's day, and heard behind me ^fa great voice, as of a trumpet, ¹¹ saying, "I ^gam Alpha and Omega, ^hThe First and The Last:" and, "What thou seest, write in a book, and send it unto the Seven Churches which are in Asia; unto Ephesus, and unto Smyrna, and unto Pergamos, and unto Thyatira, and unto Sardis, and unto Philadelphia, and unto Laodicea."

¹² And I turned to see the Voice that spake with me; and, being turned, ⁱI saw seven golden candlesticks, ¹³ and ^jin the midst of the seven candlesticks ^k*One* like unto the Son of Man, ^lclothed with a garment down to the foot, and ^mgirt about the paps with a golden girdle. ¹⁴ His head and ⁿhis hairs were white like wool, as white as snow; and ^ohis eyes were as a flame of fire; ¹⁵ and ^phis feet like unto fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace; and ^qhis voice as the sound of many waters. ¹⁶ And ^rhe had in his right hand seven stars: and ^sout of his mouth went a sharp two-edged sword: ^tand his countenance was as the sun shineth in his strength. ¹⁷ And ^uwhen I saw him, I fell at his feet as dead; and ^vhe laid his right [hand] upon me, saying [unto me], “Fear not; ^wI am The First and The Last, ¹⁸ I^xam he that liveth; and was dead, and behold! ^yI am alive for evermore, [Amen;] and ^zhave the keys of Hell and of Death. ¹⁹ Write ^athe things which thou hast seen, and ^bthe things which are, ^cand the things which shall be hereafter; ²⁰ the mystery ^dof the seven stars which thou sawest in my right hand, ^eand the seven golden candlesticks. The seven stars are ^fthe angels of the seven churches; and ^gthe seven candlesticks which thou sawest are the seven churches.

Address to the Church of Smyrna, and to all Churches under persecution and affliction.

⁸ “AND unto the Angel of the Church in SMYRNA write:—These things saith ^aThe First and The Last, which was dead, and is alive; ⁹ I ^bknow thy works, and tribulation, and poverty, (but thou art ^crich,) and I know the blasphemy of ^dthem which say they are Jews, and are not, ^ebut are the synagogue of Satan. ¹⁰ Fear ^fnone of those things which thou shalt suffer. Behold! the Devil shall cast some of you into prison, that ye may be tried; and ye shall have tribulation ten days: ¹¹ ^gbe thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee ^ha crown of life. ¹¹ “He ⁱthat hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the Churches:—He that overcometh shall not be hurt of ^jthe second death.

Address to the Church of Pergamos, and to all Churches which, by relaxing their discipline, have admitted erroneous teachers.

¹² “AND to the Angel of the Church in PERGAMOS write:—These things saith ^aHe which hath the sharp sword with two edges; ¹³ I ^bknow thy works, and where thou dwellest, even ^cwhere Satan's seat is: and thou holdest fast my Name, and hast not denied my faith, even in those days wherein Antipas was my faithful martyr, who was slain among you, where Satan dwelleth. ¹⁴ But I have a few things against thee, because thou hast there them that hold the doctrine of ^dBalaam, who taught Balak to cast a stumblingblock before the children of Israel, ^eto eat things sacrificed unto idols, ^fand to commit fornication. ¹⁵ So hast thou also them that hold the doctrine ^gof the Nicolaitanes, which thing I hate. ¹⁶ Repent; or else I will come unto thee quickly, and ^hwill fight against them with the sword of my mouth.

¹⁷ ⁱ“He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the Churches:—To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the hidden manna, and will give him a white stone, and in the stone ^ja new name written, which no man knoweth saving he that receiveth it.

Address to the Church at Thyatira, and to all Churches which retain the profession of the true faith, and abound in many respects in good works, yet still permit immorality and idolatry to continue among them.

¹⁸ ^a“AND unto the Angel of the Church in THYATIRA write:—These things saith ^bthe Son of God, ^cwho hath [his] eyes like unto a flame of fire, and his feet are like fine brass; ¹⁹ I ^dknow thy works, and charity, and service, and faith, and thy patience, and thy works; and the last to be more than the first. ²⁰ Notwithstanding I have [a few things] against thee, because thou sufferest that woman ^eJezebel, which calleth herself a prophetess, to teach and to seduce my servants ^fto commit fornication, and to eat things sacrificed unto idols. ²¹ And I gave her space ^gto repent of her fornication; and she repented not. ²² Behold! I will cast her into a bed, and them that commit adultery with her into great tribulation, except they repent of their deeds, ²³ and I will kill her children with death: and all the churches shall know that ^hI am He which searcheth the reins and hearts; and ⁱI will give unto every one of you according to your works. ²⁴ But unto you I say, and unto the rest in Thyatira, as many as have not this doctrine, and which have not known the depths of Satan, (as they speak.) I ^jwill put upon you none other burden; ²⁵ but ^kthat which ye have already hold fast till I come.

²⁶ ^l“And he that overcometh, and keepeth ^mmy works unto the end, ⁿto him will I give power over the nations; ²⁷ (and ^ohe shall rule them with a rod of iron; as the vessels of a potter shall they be broken to shivers, even as I received of my Father;) ²⁸ and I will give him ^pthe morning star. ²⁹ He ^qthat hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the Churches!

I would thou wert cold or hot! ¹⁶So then because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spew thee out of my mouth. ¹⁷Because thou sayest, ^eI am rich, and increased with goods, and have need of nothing, and knowest not that thou art wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked; ¹⁸I counsel thee ^fto buy of me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich; and ^gwhite raiment, that thou mayest be clothed, and that the shame of thy nakedness do not appear; and anoint thine eyes with eyesalve, that thou mayest see. ¹⁹As ^hmany as I love, I rebuke and chasten: be zealous therefore, and repent. ²⁰Behold! ⁱI stand at the door, and knock: ^jif any man hear my voice, and open the door, ^kI will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me.

²¹“To him that overcometh ^lwill I grant to sit with Me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne. ²²He ^mthat hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the Churches!”

§ 11.—chap. iv.

The visions of St. John begin with a representation of the whole creation uniting in the worship of Jesus Christ the God of Christianity.

¹AFTER this I looked, and, behold! a door was opened in heaven; and "the first voice which I heard was as it were of a trumpet talking with me ; which said, "Come ^bup hither, ^cand I will show thee things which must be hereafter."

² And immediately ^aI was in the Spirit : and, behold ! ^aa throne was set in heaven, and One sat on the throne. ³ And He that sat was to look upon like a jasper and a sardine-stone : ^fand there was a rainbow round about the throne, in sight like unto an emerald. ⁴ And ^ground about the throne were four and twenty seats : and upon the seats I saw four and twenty Elders sitting, ^hclothed in white raiment ; ⁱand they had on their heads crowns of gold. ⁵ And out of the throne proceeded ^jlightnings and thunderings and voices : ^kand there were seven lamps of fire burning before the throne, which ^lare the Seven Spirits of God ; ^mand before the throne there was ⁿa sea of glass like unto crystal ; ^oand in the midst of the throne, and round about the throne, were four Beasts full of eyes before ^pand behind. ⁷ And ^qthe first Beast was like a lion, and the second Beast like a calf, and the third Beast had a face as a man, and the fourth Beast was like a flying eagle. ⁸ And the four Beasts had each of them ^rsix wings about ^shim ; and ^tthey were full of eyes ^uwithin : and ^vthey rest not day and night, saying, "Holy ! ^wholy ! holy ! 'Lord God Almighty ! " which was, and is, and is to come ! " ⁹ And when those Beasts give glory and honor and thanks to Him that sat on the throne, ^xwho liveth for ever and ever, ^ythe ^zfour and twenty Elders fall down before Him that sat on the throne, ^aand worship Him that liveth for ever and ever, ^band cast their crowns before the throne, saying, ¹¹ "Thou ^cart worthy, O Lord ! to receive glory and honor and power : ^dfor Thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure they are and were created ! "

§ 12.—chap. v. 1-3.

St. John sees in his vision a book with seven seals, containing the future history of the Church of God, which no human being was able to open.

The Son of God, represented under the figure of a lamb in the act of being sacrificed, opens the book, to explain to the Church the history of its providential government to the end of time ;—the whole creation renew their praise and homage to the sacrificed Lamb of God.

¹³ And the Sixth Angel sounded, and I heard a voice from the four horns of the golden altar which is before God, ¹⁴saying to the Sixth Angel which had the trumpet, "Loose the four Angels which are bound ^bin the great river Euphrates." ¹⁵ And the four Angels were loosed, which were prepared ^{*}for an hour, and a day, and a month, and a year, for to slay the third part of men. ¹⁶ And ^cthe number of the army ^dof the horsemen were two hundred thousand thousand: ^eand I heard the number of them. ¹⁷ And thus I saw the horses in the vision, and them that sat on them, having breastplates of fire, and of jacinth, and brimstone; ^fand the heads of the horses were as the heads of lions; and out of their mouths issued fire and smoke and brimstone. ¹⁸ By these three was the third part of men killed, by the fire, and by the smoke, and by the brimstone, which issued out of their mouths. ¹⁹ For their power is in their mouth, and in their tails: ^gfor their tails were like unto serpents, and had heads, and with them they do hurt. ²⁰ And the rest of the men which were not killed by these plagues, ^hyet repented not of the works of their hands, that they should not worship ⁱdevils, ^jand idols of gold, and silver, and brass, and stone, and of wood; which neither can see, nor hear, nor walk: ²¹ neither repented they of their murders, ^knor of their sorceries, nor of their fornication, nor of their thefts.

The history of the Eastern Empire having been predicted, the prophecy proceeds to the history of the Western Empire during the same period of 1260 years—This portion of the prophecy is given to St. John by another Angel, as a separate book, to distinguish it from the events predicted by the two woe trumpets.

The Little Book, containing the prophetic history of the Western Church, is divided into five portions—The First Portion represents the separation between nominal and spiritual Christians—the contempt, and general neglect and hatred of the Scriptures and their right interpreters, under the description of Two Witnesses prophesying in sackcloth—It is predicted that these Witnesses will prophesy nearly 1260 years, till the approaching close of their testimony in sackcloth, when they will be killed, and rise again, and triumph over those who rejoiced at their death—This will take place before the sounding of the seventh trumpet—This portion of the Apocalypse is very obscure: it may be that it is a general introduction to the contents of the little book. A. D. 696 to A. D. 1866.

¹ AND there was given me "a reed like unto a rod: and the Angel stood, saying, "Rise, ^band measure the temple of God, and the altar, and them that worship therein; ² but ^cthe court which is without the temple ^{*}leave out, and measure it not; ^dfor it is given unto the Gentiles; and the holy city shall they ^etread under foot ^fforty and two months.

³ "And [†]I will give power unto my two ^gwitnesses, ^hand they shall prophesy ⁱa thousand two hundred and threescore days, clothed in sackcloth. ⁴ These are the ^jtwo olive trees, and the two candlesticks standing before the God of the earth. ⁵ And if any man will hurt them, ^kfire proceedeth out of their mouth, and devoureth their enemies; ^land if any man will hurt them, he must in this manner be killed. ⁶ These ^mhave power to shut heaven, that it rain not in the days of their prophecy; and ⁿhave power over waters to turn them to blood, and to smite the earth with all plagues, as often as they will. ⁷ And when they ^oshall have finished their testimony, ^pthe Beast that ascendeth ^qout of the bottomless pit ^rshall make war against them, and shall overcome them, and kill them. ⁸ And their dead bodies shall lie in the street of ^sthe great city, which spiritually is called Sodom and Egypt, ^twhere also our Lord was crucified. ⁹ And ^uthey of the people and kindreds and tongues and nations shall see their dead bodies three days and a half, ^vand shall not suffer their dead bodies to be put in graves. ¹⁰ And ^wthey that dwell upon the earth shall rejoice over them, and make merry, ^xand shall send gifts one to another; ^ybecause these two prophets tormented them that dwelt on the earth. ¹¹ And ^zafter three days and a half ^athe Spirit of life from God entered into them, and they stood upon their feet; and great fear fell upon them which saw them. ¹² And they heard a great voice from heaven saying unto them, Come up hither! ^bAnd they ascended up to heaven ^cin a cloud; ^dand their enemies beheld them. ¹³ And the same hour ^ewas there a great earthquake, ^fand the tenth part of the city fell, and in the earthquake were slain ^gof men seven thousand: and the remnant were affrighted, ^hand gave glory to the God of heaven.

The Second Division of the little book—Under the figures of a woman bringing forth with pain a Man-Child, and being driven by a Dragon with seven heads and ten horns into the wilderness, is prophesied the persecution of the Church of Christ, which brings forth true and faithful Christians, by the evil Spirit, which first introduced evil into this world—This contest continues also 1260 years, from 606 to 1866.

The Third Division of the little book, in which the agent of the evil Spirit, which persecuted the true Church of God 1260 years, is described by characteristics exclusively applicable to the power of "Rome."

¹ AND I stood upon the sand of the sea, and saw ^ba Beast rise up out of the sea, ^chaving seven heads and ten horns, and upon his horns ten crowns, and upon his heads the ^{*}name of Blasphemy. ² And ^dthe Beast which I saw was like unto a leopard, ^eand his feet were as the feet of a bear, ^fand his mouth as the mouth of a lion. And ^gthe Dragon gave him his power, ^hand his seat, ⁱand great authority; ³ and I saw one of his heads ^jas it were [†]wounded to death; and his deadly wound was healed. And ^kall the world wondered after the Beast, ⁴and they worshipped the Dragon which gave power unto the Beast; and they worshipped the Beast, saying, "Who ^lis like unto the Beast? who is able to make war with him?" ⁵ And there was given unto him a ^mmouth speaking great things, and blasphemies; and power was given unto him [‡]to continue ⁿforty and two months. ⁶ And he opened his mouth in blasphemy against God, to blaspheme his name, ^oand his tabernacle, and them that dwell in heaven. ⁷ And it was given unto him ^pto make war with the saints, and to overcome them: ^qand power was given him over all kindreds, and tongues, and nations. ⁸ And all that dwell upon the earth shall worship him, ^rwhose names are not written in the Book of Life of the Lamb slain ^sfrom the foundation of the world. ⁹ If ^tany man have an ear, let him hear. ¹⁰ He ^uthat leadeth into captivity shall go into captivity: ^vhe that killeth with the sword must be killed with the sword. ^wHere is the patience and the faith of the saints.

The Fourth Division of the little book, in which is represented the spiritual dominion of the Church of Rome, supported and sanctioned by the secular powers of Europe during 1260 years.

¹¹ AND I beheld another Beast ^acoming up out of the earth; and he had two horns like a lamb, and he spake as a dragon; ¹² and he exerciseth all the power of the first Beast before him, and causeth the earth and them which dwell therein to worship the first Beast, ^bwhose deadly wound was healed; ¹³ and ^che doeth great wonders, ^dso that he maketh fire come down from heaven on the earth in the sight of men. ¹⁴ And ^edeceiveth them that dwell on the earth ^fby the means of those miracles which he had power to do in the sight of the Beast; saying to them that dwell on the earth, that they should make an Image to the Beast, which had the wound by a sword, ^gand did live. ¹⁵ And he had power to give ^hlife unto the Image of the Beast, that the Image of the Beast should both speak, ⁱand cause that as many as would not worship the Image of the Beast should be killed. ¹⁶ And he caused all, both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond, [†]to ^jreceive a mark in their right hand, or in their foreheads; ¹⁷ [and] that no man might buy or sell, save he that had the mark, or ^kthe name of the Beast, ^lor the number of his name. ¹⁸ Here ^mis wisdom; let him that hath understanding count ⁿthe number of the Beast: ^ofor it is the number of a man, and his number is Six hundred threescore and six.

The Fifth Division of the little book contains a representation of the depressed condition of the spiritual Church of God during the 1260 years—The Reformation by Luther—The present efforts of Protestants to enlighten mankind, and a future still more successful opposition to Popery, are probably predicted under the representation of three Angels appealing to mankind.

^a The Editor takes this opportunity to say, once for all, that his views of the application of the Apocalypse are quite different from those of Mr. Townsend. As St. John says in his preface to the book, that it was to relate to "things which must shortly come to pass," he feels constrained to adopt the idea, that its application is much less extensive than is supposed. He prefers the hypothesis of Professor Lee.

The contents of the little book having been related, the prophet proceeds to the sounding of the third woe trumpet, when the Seven Vials are to be poured out, or the seven thunders to sound, which the angel forbade St. John to write (Rev. x. 4.) till he had revealed the predictions of the little book—It was declared (chap. x. 7.) that the mystery of God should be completed in the days of the voice of the Seventh Angel—The terrible events which shall precede the establishment of the kingdom of Christ, at the end of the 1260 years, are related under the emblems of the vintage, and the harvest of the wrath of God; and the triumph of the Church of God, after the completion of his judgments, is anticipated.

¹⁷ And another Angel came out of the temple which is in heaven, he also having a sharp sickle. ¹⁸ And another Angel came out from the altar, ^gwhich had power over fire; and cried with a loud cry to him that had the sharp sickle, saying, "Thrust ^ein thy sharp sickle, and gather the clusters of the vine of the earth ! for her grapes are fully ripe." ¹⁹ And the Angel thrust in his sickle into the earth, and gathered the vine of the earth, and east it into ^hthe great winepress of the wrath of God. ²⁰ And ⁱthe winepress was trodden ^jwithout the city, and blood came out of the winepress, ^keven unto the horse-bridles, by the space of a thousand and six hundred furlongs.

"Great and marvellous are thy works ! Lord God Almighty !

⁴ Who ^wshall not fear thee, O Lord ! and glorify thy name ?

For Thou only art holy :

For ^xall nations shall come and worship before Thee ;

For thy judgments are made manifest."

The seventh woe trumpet, which was described, in the first part of the vision concerning the 1260 years, as sounding after the completion of the progress of the Mahometan powers, (which finally ceased in 1698, Rev. xi. 15-19.), and which closed the prophetic history of the Eastern Empire, till the time of the overthrow of that religion, now sounds ; and Seven Angels are represented as preparing the vials of God's wrath, to punish the earth, the Mahometan, Papal, and Infidel powers, before the day of universal Christianity begins. A. D. 1698 to A. D. 1860.

The First Vial is poured out, and the harvest of the wrath of God begins—Some severe calamity, between the completion of the progress of Mahometanism and the approaching end of the 1260 years is predicted—We consider the pouring out of this vial to be predictive of the French Revolution ; that event being the most terrible calamity which has hitherto happened to the votaries of the Papal religion, which in its effects is still agitating the whole civilized world—The sore, which is predicted as afflicting the Papacy, may be Infidelity. A. D. 1789 to A. D. 1791.

AND the First went, and poured out his vial ^aupon the earth ; and ^bthere fell a noisome and grievous sore upon the men ^cwhich had the mark of the Beast, and upon them ^dwhich worshipped his Image.

AND the Second [Angel] poured out his vial ^aupon the sea ; and it

§ 39.—chap. xvi. 4-7.

The Third Vial is poured out, the rivers and fountains become blood—By these emblems may be denoted the pollutions of Infidelity on the sources of knowledge, and the devastations of the lesser states of Europe during the revolutionary wars, A. D. 1794 to A. D. 1801.

§ 41.—chap. xvi. 10, 11.

The Fifth Vial is poured out—The votaries of the Papacy are represented in a distressed and agonized condition—We are now living under this vial—Possibly by this emblem may be intended the hatred of Papal Rome to that increasing and irresistible progress of knowledge, which demonstrates the absurdities and errors of the Papal religion, without producing reformation and repentance.

§ 42.—chap. xvi. 12-16.

The Sixth Vial is poured out—By this time the end of the 1260 years approaches—The emblems under this vial represent the nearer, though still gradual downfall of the Turkish Empire, the preparation for the restoration of the Jews, and the commencement of the great confederacy of the Antichristian powers against the Church of Christ in Palestine, under the influence of evil principles or false religions.

¹² AND the Sixth [Angel] poured out his vial ^a upon the great river Euphrates; ^b and the water thereof was dried up, ^c that the way of the kings of the East might be prepared. ¹³ And I saw three unclean ^d spirits like frogs come out of the mouth of ^e the Dragon, and out of the mouth of the Beast, and out of the mouth of ^f the False Prophet; ¹⁴ (for ^g they are the spirits of devils, ^h working miracles;) which go forth unto the kings of the earth, ⁱ and of the whole world, to gather them to ^j the battle of that great day of God Almighty. ¹⁵ (Behold! ^k I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth, and keepeth his garments, ^l lest he walk naked, and they see his shame!) ¹⁶ And ^m he gathered them together into a place called in the Hebrew tongue Armageddon.

The Seventh Vial is poured out—The 1260 years are now past—The vintage of the wrath of God, long predicted by the ancient prophets, now begins—Great convulsions, long wars over the earth—The decision of the long contest between good and evil now arrives—the union of the false religions of the Papacy and Infidelity against the remnant of the Church, against the Jews who assemble for their long-promised restoration, and against the great maritime nation, probably England, till the battle of Armageddon, in Palestine, now takes place. It is probable that many years may be included under this vial.

¹⁷ AND the Seventh Angel poured out his vial into the air; and there came a great voice out of the temple of heaven, from the throne, saying, “It ^ais done!” ¹⁸ And ^bthere were voices, and thunders, and lightnings; ^cand there was a great earthquake, ^dsuch as was not since men were upon the earth, so mighty an earthquake, and so great. ¹⁹ And ^ethe great city was divided into three parts, and the cities of the nations fell: and great Babylon ^fcame in remembrance before God, ^gto give unto her the cup of the wine of the fierceness of his wrath. ²⁰ And ^hevery island fled away, and the mountains were not found. ²¹ And ⁱthere fell upon men a great hail out of heaven, every stone about the weight of a talent: and ^jmen blasphemed God because of ^kthe plague of the hail; for the plague thereof was exceeding great.

After the general annunciation of these great events, the Prophet is shown the history and state of the Papacy before its final overthrow.

⁷ And the Angel said unto me, “Wherefore didst thou marvel? I will tell thee the mystery of the Woman, and of the Beast that carrieth her, which hath the seven heads and ten horns. ⁸ The Beast that thou sawest was, and is not, and ^vshall ascend out of the bottomless pit, and ^wgo into perdition; and they that dwell on the earth ^xshall wonder, ^ywhose names were not written in the Book of Life from the foundation of the world, when they behold the Beast that was, and is not, and yet is. ⁹ And ^zhere is the mind which hath wisdom. ^a The seven heads are seven mountains, on which the Woman sitteth; ¹⁰ and [there] are seven kings. Five are fallen, and one is, and the other is not yet come; and when he cometh, he must continue a short space. ¹¹ And the Beast that was, and is not, even he is the eighth, and is of the seven, ^band goeth into perdition. ¹² And ^cthe ten horns which thou sawest are ten kings, which have received no kingdom as yet; but receive power as kings one hour with the Beast. ¹³ These have one mind, and shall give their power and strength unto the Beast. ¹⁴ These ^dshall make war with the Lamb, ^eand the Lamb shall overcome them; (for ^fhe is Lord of lords, and King of kings;) ^gand they that are with Him are called, and chosen, and faithful.” ¹⁵ And he saith unto me, “The ^hwaters which thou sawest, where the Whore sitteth, ⁱare peo-

⁹ And he saith unto me, “Write, ^pBlessed are they which are called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb!” And he saith unto me, “These ^qare the true sayings of God.” ¹⁰ And ^rI fell at his feet to worship him; and he said unto me, “See ^s*thou do it not*; I am thy fellow-servant, and of thy brethren ^tthat have the testimony of Jesus: worship God! (For the testimony of Jesus is ^u‘the spirit of prophecy.’)”

Probable visible manifestation of the Son of God at the final overthrow of evil, as he had appeared to the Patriarchs, and to the Apostles after his resurrection—and the commencement of a new dispensation, and the triumph of a spiritual Church.

¹¹ AND “I saw heaven opened, and behold, ^aa white horse! and He that sat upon him was called ^bFaithful and True, and ^cin righteousness He doth judge and make war; ¹² his ^deyes were as a flame of fire, ^eand on his head were many crowns; ^fand He had a name written, that no man knew, but He himself; ¹³ and ^gHe was clothed with a vesture dipped in blood: and his name is called ^hTHE WORD OF GOD. ¹⁴ And ⁱthe armies which were in heaven followed Him upon white horses, ^j*clothed in fine linen, white and clean. ¹⁵ And ^kout of his mouth goeth a sharp sword, that with it He should smite the nations, and ^lHe

⁴ And I saw ^fthrones, and they sat upon them, and ^gjudgment was given unto them: and I saw ^hthe souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and ⁱwhich had not worshipped the Beast, ^jneither his image, neither had received his mark upon [their] foreheads, or in their hands; and they lived and ^kreigned with Christ a thousand years: ⁵but the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the First Resurrection. ⁶ Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such ^lthe Second Death hath no power, but they shall be ^mpriests of God and of Christ, ⁿand shall reign with him a thousand years.

Towards the end of the millennial dispensation the spirit of evil begins to revive, but its further progress is stopped by the general resurrection, and the final judgment of mankind.

Beast and the False Prophet are, and ^hshall be tormented day and night for ever and ever.

¹¹ And I saw a great white throne, and Him that sat on it, from whose face ⁱthe earth and the heaven fled away; ^jand there was found no place for them. ¹² And I saw the dead, ^ksmall and great, stand before God, ^land the books were opened; and another ^mbook was opened, which is the Book of Life: and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, ⁿaccording to their works. ¹³ And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; ^oand Death and ^pHell delivered up the dead which were in them: ^qand they were judged every man according to their works; ¹⁴ and ^rDeath and Hell were cast into the lake of fire: ^sthis is the Second Death. ¹⁵ And whosoever was not found written in the Book of Life ^twas cast into the lake of fire.

Description of the future eternal happiness, when death, and evil, and grief, shall exist no more among mankind.

§ 51.—chap. xxi. 5-8.

Christ declares the certainty and truth of this representation; and invites all men to partake of this happiness.

⁵ AND "He that sat upon the throne said, "Behold! ^bI make all things new." And He said unto me, "Write: for ^cthese words are true and faithful." ⁶ And he said unto me, "It ^dis done! I ^eam Alpha and Omega, The Beginning and The End. ^fI will give unto him that is athirst of the fountain of the water of life freely: ^ghe that overcometh shall inherit ^hall things; and ⁱI will be his God, and he shall be my son. ⁸ But ^jthe fearful, and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolators, and all liars, shall have their part in ^kthe lake which burneth with fire and brimstone: which is the second death."

The spiritual happiness of the heavenly Church, which has been collected from among all mankind, is further represented under the emblems of a New Jerusalem, and another Paradise; the well-known types of the heavenly state under the two former dispensations.

⁹ AND there came unto me one of ^athe Seven Angels which had the seven vials full of the seven last plagues, and talked with me, saying, "Come hither, I will show thee ^bthe Bride, the Lamb's wife." ¹⁰ And he carried me away ^cin the Spirit to a great and high mountain, and showed me ^dthat [great] city, the Holy Jerusalem, descending out of heaven from God, ¹¹ having ^ethe glory of God.—And her light was like unto a stone most precious, even like a jasper stone, clear as crystal; ¹² and had a wall great and high, and had ^ftwelve gates, and at the gates twelve angels, and names written thereon, which are the names of the twelve tribes of the children of Israel. ¹³ On ^gthe east, three gates; on the north, three gates; on the south, three gates; and on the west, three gates. ¹⁴ And the wall of the city had twelve foundations, and ^hin them the names of the twelve apostles of the Lamb.—¹⁵ And he that talked with me ⁱhad a golden reed to measure the city, and the gates thereof, and the wall thereof. ¹⁶ And the city lieth four-square, and the length is as large as the breadth. And he measured the city with the reed, twelve thousand furlongs: the length and the breadth and the height of it are equal. ¹⁷ And he measured the wall thereof, a hundred and forty and four cubits, according to the measure of a man, that is, of the Angel.—¹⁸ And the building of the wall of it was of jasper; and the city was pure gold, like unto clear glass. ¹⁹ And ^jthe foundations of the wall of the city were garnished with all manner of precious stones: the first foundation was jasper; the second, sapphire; the third, a chalcedony; the fourth, an emerald; ²⁰ the fifth, sardonyx; the sixth, sardius; the seventh, chrysolite; the eighth, beryl; the ninth, a topaz; the tenth, a chrysoprasus; the eleventh, a jacinth; the twelfth, an amethyst. ²¹ And the twelve gates were twelve pearls; every several gate was of one pearl; ^kand the street of the city was pure gold, as it were transparent glass.—²² And ^lI saw no temple therein: for the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple of it. ²³ And ^mthe city had no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine in it: for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof. ²⁴ And ⁿthe nations [of them which are saved] shall walk in the light of it: and the kings of the earth do bring their glory [and honor] into it. ²⁵ And ^othe gates of it shall not be shut at all by day; (for ^pthere shall be no night there;) ²⁶ and ^qthey shall bring the glory and honor of the nations into it. ²⁷ And ^rthere shall in no wise enter into it any thing that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie: but they which are written in the Lamb's ^sBook of Life.

⁶ And he said unto me, "These ^esayings are faithful and true; and the LORD God [of the holy] prophets ^fsent his Angel to show unto his servants the things which must shortly be done. ⁷ Behold! ^gI come quickly. ^hBlessed is he that keepeth the sayings of the prophecy of this book." ⁸ And I John saw these things, and heard them; and when I had heard and seen, ⁱI fell down to worship before the feet of the Angel which showed me these things. ⁹ Then saith he unto me, "See thou do it not; for I am thy fellow-servant, and of thy brethren the prophets, and of them which keep the sayings of this book:—worship God!"

Christ declares that the prophecies of the Revelation are not to be sealed up, as they are intended for the knowledge and improvement of the whole human race.

¹⁰ AND ^ahe saith unto me, "Seal not the sayings of the prophecy of this book: ^b[for] the time is at hand. ¹¹ He ^cthat is unjust, let him be unjust still—and he which is filthy, let him be filthy still—and he that is righteous, let him be righteous still—and he that is holy, let him be holy still.

¹² “And, ^dbehold! I come quickly, and ^emy reward is with me, ^fto give every man according as his work shall be. ¹³ I ^gam Alpha and Omega, The Beginning and The End, The First and The Last.

§ 54.—chap. xxii. 16–19, and former part of ver. 20.

Christ now makes his last appeal by the Spirit of prophecy to the world, by again declaring both his divinity and humanity, inviting all mankind into the Christian Church, commanding them to make the Scriptures their guide, and announcing his future advent.

¹⁷ “And the Spirit and ^dthe Bride say, Come! And let him that heareth say, Come! ^eAnd let him that is athirst come; and whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely.

§ 55.—chap. xxii. last part of ver. 20, and 21.

St. John concludes the Apocalypse with an ardent aspiration for the coming of Christ, and a prayer for a blessing on the Churches.

²⁰ Even ^aso, come, Lord Jesus! ²¹ The ^bgrace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all! [Amen.]

[END OF THE REVELATION.]

SECTION XIX.—St. John writes his First Epistle^o to confute the Errors of the false Teachers, and their different Sects—against the Docetæ, who denied the Humanity of Christ (chap. iv. 3.), asserting that his Body and Sufferings were not real, but imaginary—against the Cerinthians and Ebionites, who contended that he was a mere Man, and that his Divinity was only adventitious, and therefore separated from him at his Passion (chap. ii. 22.), and against the Nicolaitanes (Rev. ii. 15.) or Gnostics, who taught that the Knowledge of God and Christ was sufficient for Salvation; that being justified by Faith, and freed from the Restraints of the Law, they might indulge in Sin with impunity—He cautions Christians against being seduced by these Doctrines and Practices, by condemning them in the strongest terms—He contrasts them with the Truths and Doctrines of the Gospel, in which they had been instructed, and in which they are exhorted to continue.

THE FIRST EPISTLE OF JOHN.

§ 1.—chap. i. 1–4.

The Apostle begins by asserting, in opposition to the false teachers, that Jesus Christ, who was from eternity, had as man a real body; in proof of which he declares they had heard him speak, they had looked on him and handled him after his resurrection, and were convinced by the testimony of their senses of the identity of his person—The Fountain of Life, the Son, or Word of God, was made manifest in the flesh to all, and was seen by the apostles, who bear witness of the eternal life possessed by Him with the Father, which was made known to them at his baptism and transfiguration—The apostles declare the miracles and doctrines they had seen and heard; that all who believe their testimony may enter with them into communion with God and Christ; which union with the Divine Nature should make their joy complete.

¹ THAT ^awhich was from the beginning, which we have heard, which we have seen with our eyes, ^bwhich we have looked upon, and ^cour hands have handled, of the Word of Life; ² (for ^dthe Life ^ewas manifested, and we have seen it, ^fand bear witness, ^gand show unto you that Eternal Life, ^hwhich was with the Father, and was manifested unto us;) ³ that ⁱwhich we have seen and heard declare we unto you, that ye also may have fellowship with us; and truly ^jour fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ. ⁴ And these things write we unto you, ^kthat your joy may be full.

§ 2.—chap. i. 5, to the end.

To confute the doctrines of those who perverted the grace of God to licentiousness, St. John declares that God is perfect light, therefore perfect knowledge and unspotted holiness, without the least imperfection or ignorance—Those, therefore, who profess to have a communication with God, and lead a sinful life, act as contrary to his holy nature as darkness is to light—Those who walk after the light received from him, who is essentially and perfectly pure and holy, have communion with God, and the atoning blood of Christ will cleanse them from sin—Those who say they have no sin, and therefore have no need of a Saviour, have no knowledge of their own hearts, or of the great truth of the Gospel, the fall and recovery of man—But those who from a deep sense of guilt confess their sins to God, who is faithful to his promises of mercy (Ps. xxxii. 5. Prov. xxviii. 13.) and just to his own perfections, Christ having made an atonement to the divine justice, will have their sins forgiven, and their hearts cleansed by the sanctifying influences of the Holy Spirit—Those who assert they have not sinned make God a liar, and can have no knowledge of his word, which has declared throughout Revelation, that all mankind are in a degenerate state under guilt and condemnation.

⁵ THIS ^athen is the message which we have heard of him, and declare unto you, that ^bGod is Light, and in Him is no darkness at all. ⁶ If ^cwe say that we have fellowship with Him, and walk in darkness, we lie, and do not the truth; ⁷ but if we walk in the light, as He is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and ^dthe blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin.

⁸ If ^ewe say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, ^fand the truth is not in us. ⁹ If ^gwe confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to ^hcleanse us from all unrighteousness. ¹⁰ If we say that we have not sinned, we make Him a liar, and his word is not in us.

The Apostle, as their spiritual father, addresses himself to the newly converted, showing that the mercies of God in redemption, by the blood of Christ, should prevent instead of encourage them to sin (Ps. cxxx. 4.)—Those who sin from infirmity have an advocate abiding with the Father, who is the sacrifice of atonement for the sins of all believers, both Jews and Gentiles—The only sure mark of a true faith and true knowledge of God is the keeping of his commandments—For he who asserts he has a knowledge of God (as the Gnostics did) and indulges in sin is a liar, and acts contrary to the truth; but those who observe his doctrines, in them the design of the love of God in the death of Christ is made perfect, and they know they have communion with him by the influence of his Spirit in their hearts and lives: for he that professes to be united to Christ, through his Spirit, ought to walk or behave as Christ did while he was on earth.

³ And hereby we do know that we know Him, if we keep his commandments. ⁴ He ^dthat saith, I know Him, and keepeth not his commandments, ^eis a liar, and the truth is not in him. ⁵ But ^fwhoso keepeth his word, ^gin him verily is the love of God perfected. ^hHereby know we that we are in Him. ⁱHe ^jthat saith he abideth in Him, ^kought himself also so to walk, even as He walked.

St. John, in exhorting them to holiness and obedience to Christ, writes no new commandment, but what was inculcated by the law of nature, and by the Mosaic Dispensation (Deut. xviii. 15.)—On the other hand it may be called a new commandment, as being renewed and enforced by higher motives and obligations, for the typical representations of the Mosaic Dispensation were now past, and the light of truth is shining, pointing out their signification and accomplishment—He who hates his brother has no fellowship with God, but, like the Jews who hated the Gentiles, he is in darkness and ignorance, whatever are his pretensions—But he that loves his brother gives proof that he lives in Christ; and being in the light he can see his way, and is preserved from stumbling, or giving offence (John xi. 9.)—But he that walketh in darkness is in the greatest danger of falling, to his own destruction, not knowing whither he goeth—He writes to the infants, or those newly born into the family of their heavenly Father, because their sins are forgiven for Christ's sake—To those who had been of the longest standing in the Christian faith, because they had attained to the greatest knowledge of the doctrines and manner of life of Christ, who was from eternity—To those who are in the vigor of their spiritual life, because they had overcome the Wicked One—To those who had not made much progress, because they were adopted sons, and had received the Holy Spirit—He cautions the whole household of God, in their different gradations, not to love the world, or earthly things, which are incompatible with the love of God and man; for all its gratifications, magnificence, and honors, neither come from nor lead to God, but are excited by the things of the world, which passes away with its followers; but they who do the will of God, mortifying their worldly lusts, shall live for ever.

⁷ BRETHREN, ^aI write no new commandment unto you, but an old commandment ^bwhich ye had from the beginning; the old commandment is the word which ye have heard [from the beginning]. ⁸ Again, ^ca new commandment I write unto you, which thing is true in Him and in you: ^dbecause the darkness is past, and ^ethe true light now shineth. ⁹ He ^fthat saith he is in the light, and hateth his brother, is in darkness even until now. ¹⁰ He ^gthat loveth his brother abideth in the light, and ^hthere is none ⁱoccasion of stumbling in him; ¹¹ but he that hateth his brother is in darkness, and ^jwalketh in darkness, and knoweth not whither he goeth, because that darkness hath blinded his eyes.

§ 5.—chap. ii. 18, to the end.

The Apostle assures his converts that the end of the Apostolic Age had come—He reminds them of Christ's prediction (Matt. vii. 15. and xxiv. 11, 12, 24, 25.), which was now accomplished in their false teachers, who went out from the Christian Church, having, to serve their own purpose, joined themselves to it—He writes to them not because they are ignorant of the truths of the incarnation of the Word, and the necessity of a holy life, but because they know it, and can testify that every opposite doctrine must be false—Who then is the liar, or false prophet, predicted by our Saviour, but he who denies Jesus who came in the flesh to be the Christ, the Messiah of God—He is Antichrist who denies that God is the Father of the Lord Jesus Christ, and who denies the divine and human nature of the Son—He who denies Jesus to be the Son of God hath no regard to the Father, who has declared him to be so at his baptism and transfiguration; but he who acknowledges him is accepted of the Father also—He exhorts them to continue in the doctrines they had received concerning Christ from the apostles, and they shall be in fellowship with the Son and the Father, and be made partakers of God's promise of eternal life through the Son—He has written these things concerning those who would attempt to seduce them, to caution them against these impostors; although they had received the Holy Ghost, and needed not to be taught how to judge between the true and false doctrines, for the Spirit had fully instructed them in the truth, in which they must abide, and be united to Christ through the same Spirit, if they would have confidence before him at his coming—For as they know that God is perfectly righteous, those only who practise righteousness are born or generated by his Holy Spirit, and become his children.

¹⁸ LITTLE ^achildren, it is ^bthe last time: and as ye have heard that ^cAntichrist shall come, ^deven now are there many Antichrists; whereby we know ^ethat it is the last time. ¹⁹ They ^fwent out from us, but they were not of us; for ^gif they had been of us, they would no doubt have continued with us: but they went out, ^hthat they might be made manifest that they were not all of us. ²⁰ But ⁱye have an unction ^jfrom the Holy One, and ^kye know all things. ²¹ I have not written unto you because ye know not the truth, but because ye know it, and that no lie is of the truth. ²² Who ^lis a liar but he that denieth that Jesus is the Christ? He is Antichrist, that denieth the Father and the Son.
²³ Whosoever ^mdenieth the Son, the same hath not the Father: ⁿhe that acknowledgeth the Son hath the Father also. ²⁴ Let that therefore abide in you, ^owhich ye have heard from the beginning: if that which ye have heard from the beginning shall remain in you, ^pye also shall continue in the Son, and in the Father. ²⁵ And ^qthis is the promise that He hath promised us, even eternal life. ²⁶ These things have I written unto you ^rconcerning them that seduce you. ²⁷ But ^sthe anointing which ye have received of Him abideth in you, and ^tye need not that any man teach you; but as the same anointing ^uteacheth you of all things, and is truth, and is no lie; and even as it hath taught you, ye shall abide in ^vHim.

²⁸ And now, little children, abide in Him; that, ^wwhen He shall appear, we may have confidence, ^xand not be ashamed before Him at his coming. ²⁹ If ^yye know that He is righteous, ^zye know that ^zevery one that doeth righteousness is born of Him.

§ 6.—chap. iii. 1-8.

The Apostle calls upon them to contemplate the wonderful love of God, in adopting those who persevere in righteousness for his children, whom the world does not acknowledge, because it did not acknowledge Christ—It is not yet manifest how glorious the children of God will be; but it is known, that when Christ shall appear to judge the world, they shall be made like him in body and mind, and be admitted to the knowledge and enjoyment of his glory and perfections—All who have this hope will endeavour to imitate his holiness—But those who persevere in sin shall be certainly punished, because sin is a violation of the Law of God; for the Son of God was manifested in the flesh to redeem mankind from its power, and punishment—As he was free from sin himself, he would not obtain, as the false teachers had insinuated, the liberty of sinning for others—Those who are in fellowship with Christ, therefore, abstain from sin; but those who continue in sin have no knowledge of him—He exhorts them not to be deceived in this matter, for those who work righteousness are, in their limited nature and capacity, righteous; as God is righteous according to the infinitude of his nature—He that persists in sin is a child of the Devil, who introduced sin into the world ; for which end the Son of God was manifested in the flesh, that he might dissolve, or destroy, the works of the Devil, and restore mankind to holiness and the favor of God.

¹ BEHOLD what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that ^awe should be called the sons of God ! Therefore the world knoweth us not, ^bbecause it knew Him not. ² Beloved, ^cnow are we the sons of God, and ^dit doth not yet appear what we shall be : but we know that, when He shall appear, ^ewe shall be like Him ; for ^fwe shall see Him as He is.

³ And ^gevery man that hath this hope in Him purifieth himself, even as He is pure. ⁴ Whosoever committeth sin transgresseth also the Law : for ^hsin is the transgression of the Law. ⁵ And ye know ⁱthat He was manifested ^jto take away our sins ; and ^kin Him is no sin. ⁶ Whosoever abideth in Him sinneth not : ^lwhosoever sinneth hath not seen Him, neither known Him. ⁷ Little children, ^mlet no man deceive you : ⁿhe that doeth righteousness is righteous, even as He is righteous. ⁸ He ^othat committeth sin is of the Devil ; for the Devil sinneth from the beginning. For this purpose ^pthe Son of God was manifested, ^qthat he might destroy the works of the Devil.

§ 7.—chap. iii. 9–17.

The Apostle contrasts the conduct of the children of God with that of the children of the Devil, and shows that the former are distinguished by their righteousness and brotherly love, which was the command given by God from the very beginning—They are not to act as those begotten of the Wicked One, as Cain did, who killed his brother, because his works were righteous ; nor are they to wonder, after such an example, if they should be hated and persecuted by the world—But this to Christians is of no consequence, for they are assured that they have passed away from a state of death to a state of life, because they love their brethren ; but he that loves not his brother remains still in a state of spiritual death, unconverted, and unregenerated—He who hates his brother has the same malice and evil principle in him which was in Cain ; and, were he not restrained by human laws, would be a murderer like him—No man who cherishes such feelings can have the divine life dwelling within him—The great love of God was made known by his Son laying down his life for mankind ; and Christians should be willing, from love to God, to sacrifice their lives for the benefit of mankind—But instead of doing this, if those who have the good things of the present world refuse to impart a portion of them to a brother in need, it is not possible they can have the love of God abiding in them.

^cWhosoever doeth not righteousness is not of God, ^dneither he that loveth not his brother. ¹¹ For ^ethis is the ^f*message that ye heard from the beginning, ^gthat we should love one another ; ¹² not as ^hCain, who was of that Wicked One, and slew his brother—and wherefore slew he him ? because his own works were evil, and his brother's righteous. ¹³ Marvel not, my brethren, if ⁱthe world hate you. ¹⁴ We ^jknow that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren : ^khe that loveth not his brother abideth in death. ¹⁵ Whosoever ^lhateth his brother is a murderer : and ye know that ^mno murderer hath eternal life abiding in him.

¹⁶ Hereby ⁿperceive we the love of God, because He laid down his life for us : and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren. ¹⁷ But ^owhoso hath this world's good, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, ^phow dwelleth the love of God in him ?

§ 8.—chap. iii. 18, to the end.

The Apostle exhorts them not to be content with an acknowledgment of these great doctrines, nor with empty professions of love ; but to prove their conviction of their truth by their actions—Love to God and man is the surest test which Christians have of the truth of their religion, and this proof will assure them their hearts are right in his sight—If their conscience condemn them as being deficient in brotherly love and charity, God, who is greater than their heart, and sees all its secrets, will condemn them in a much greater degree; but if their conscience condemn them not, they have confidence towards God, and they know that whatsoever they ask they shall receive, as far as is consistent with their own good; because they keep his commandments, and do the things which they consider pleasing in his sight—And this is God's great and new commandment, that they should believe in his Son Jesus Christ, and be enabled, through his Holy Spirit, to love one another, as Christ by his own example has given them commandment—Those who keep God's commandments live in communion with the Father and the Son, through his Spirit, and they know that God dwells within them by the testimony of his Spirit, and its influence on their hearts and lives (compare John xiv. 23.)

14. 17.

¹⁸ My little children, ^alet us not love in word, neither in tongue; but in deed and in truth. ¹⁹ And hereby we know ^bthat we are of the truth, and shall ^cassure our hearts before Him; ²⁰ for ^cif our heart condemn us, God is greater than our heart, and knoweth all things. ²¹ Beloved, ^dif our heart condemn us not, ^ethen have we confidence toward God; ²² and ^fwhatsoever we ask, we receive of Him, because we keep his commandments, ^gand do those things that are pleasing in his sight. ²³ And ^hthis is his commandment, That we should believe on the name of his Son Jesus Christ, ⁱand love one another, ^jas he gave us commandment. ²⁴ And ^khe that keepeth his commandments ^ldwell-eth in Him, and He in him; and ^mhereby we know that He abideth in us, by the Spirit which He hath given us.

St. John exhorts them not to believe every teacher who professes to be divinely inspired, but to make trial of them—because many false teachers have gone out into the world—Those who have the Divine Spirit are known by maintaining that Jesus is the Christ come in the flesh, (1 Cor. xii. 3.)—Every teacher who denies that Jesus Christ had come in the flesh is not from God—but is of the Antichrist, or deceivers, foretold, (Matt. xxiv. 24.)—But they, under the influence of the divine Spirit, have overcome the doctrines of these impostors, for greater is the Spirit of God which is in them, than the spirit of the Evil One which is in the world—These seek only the things of this world, governed by the carnal principle, and worldly men hear them—But the Apostles are of God—influenced by the spiritual principle, and those who have spiritual discernment receive their doctrine—and by their lives and doctrines the true and false teachers may be known.

¹ BELOVED, ^abelieve not every spirit, but ^btry the spirits whether they are of God: because ^cmany false prophets are gone out into the world. ² Hereby know ye the Spirit of God: ^devery spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God. ³ And ^eevery spirit that confesseth not [that] Jesus Christ [is come in the flesh], is not of God; and this is that spirit of Antichrist, whereof ye have heard that it should come, and ^feven now already is it in the world. ⁴ Ye ^gare of God, little children, and have overcome them: because greater is He that is in you, than ^hhe that is in the world. ⁵ They ⁱare of the world; therefore speak they of the world, and ^jthe world heareth them. ⁶ We are of God: ^khe that knoweth God heareth us; he that is not of God heareth not us. Hereby know we ^lthe Spirit of truth, and the spirit of error.

The Apostle, in condemnation perhaps of those who insisted on the sufficiency of speculative knowledge, exhorts them to the practice of mutual love, which proceeds from the Spirit of God—for every one who is governed by this divine principle of love is born of God, spiritually regenerated, and made a partaker of his nature—He that loves not has no knowledge of the divine nature of God, which is essentially love—The infinite love of God was made manifest by the incarnation of his Only-begotten Son, who died for mankind, and became the propitiation for their sins, that they might live through him—No man hath seen God, because he cannot be an object of sense, but, if they love one another, God dwells in them by his Spirit, and his love is made perfect in them, and by this evidence of his Spirit they are assured that God dwells in them—The apostles, having seen Jesus Christ made manifest in the flesh, and what he did for the salvation of man, bear witness that the Father sent the Son in the flesh to be the Saviour of the world—Whosoever shall acknowledge the reality of Christ's incarnation and divinity (which many denied), God dwells with him through the Spirit, and he in God—They have witnessed the great love of God to mankind in sending his Son to die in the flesh—God is love, and he who dwells in love to God and man is full of God, for God is the essence of love; and love is made perfect by God uniting man to himself by his Holy Spirit; which union gives him confidence in the day of judgment, and removes all his fears—He that feareth hath not received that fulness of love to God and man, which proceeds from God, and is the abiding witness of the Spirit, renewing the image of God in man—the love of man to God proceeds from God's love shown to them—He, therefore, who asserts that he loves God, and hates his brother, whose excellences and good qualities he has seen, and therefore will be disposed to love, cannot love God, whose perfections cannot be seen—God has also commanded that they should give a proof of their love to him, by their love to mankind.

⁷ BELOVED, ^alet us love one another: for love is of God; and every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God; ⁸ he that loveth not ^bknoweth not God, for ^cGod is Love. ⁹ In ^dthis was manifested the love of God toward us, because that God sent his Only-begotten Son into the world, ^ethat we might live through him. ¹⁰ Herein is love, ^fnot that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son ^gto be the Propitiation for our sins. ¹¹ Beloved, ^hif God so loved us, we ought also to love one another. ¹² No ⁱman hath seen God at any time: if we love one another, God dwelleth in us, and ^jhis love is perfected in us. ¹³ Hereby ^kknow we that we dwell in him, and he in us, because he hath given us of his Spirit.

¹⁴ And ^lwe have seen and do testify that ^mthe Father sent the Son to be the Saviour of the world. ¹⁵ Whosoever ⁿshall confess that Jesus is ^othe Son of God, God dwelleth in him, and he in God. ¹⁶ And we have known and believed the love that God hath to us. ^pGod is Love; and ^qhe that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him. ¹⁷ (Herein is ^rour love made perfect, that ^swe may have boldness in the day of judgment; ^tbecause as he is, so are we in this world. ¹⁸ There is no fear in love, but perfect love casteth out fear; because fear hath torment: he that feareth ^uis not made perfect in love. ¹⁹ We love Him, because He first loved us.) ²⁰ If ^va man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar. For he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God ^wwhom he hath not seen? ²¹ And ^xthis commandment have we from him, That he who loveth God love his brother also.

The Apostle, after having declared that all who believe that Jesus is the Christ are born of God by the influence of his Spirit, asserts that those who love God, their spiritual Father, must necessarily love his children—The best criterion they have of judging of their own faith, is to find out whether their love to the children of God proceeds from a right principle, from love to God and obedience to his commandments; which are not burthensome to those who love God—Those who are spiritually regenerated are able, by a true faith in the Son of God, to overcome all the temptations of the world—This is that Jesus, who was proved in human form to be the promised Messiah, by water at his baptism, by a Voice from heaven, and the visible descent of the Holy Spirit—and not by water only, but by blood—by the sacrifice of his humanity, when the same Spirit bore witness to his divinity, and the accomplishment of all prophecy, by his resurrection; and the Spirit cannot deceive—There are Three that bear record in heaven; the Father, by accepting the atonement of his Son—The Word, who presents his crucified body before the throne of God—The Holy Ghost, by whom the Word was conceived, and made Flesh; and these Three are One, as to the unity of their design, and the divinity of their nature—And there are three that bear witness on earth: the Holy Spirit, by his miraculous and sanctifying influences, and by the written word—The water of baptism, by which mankind are admitted into the family of God, the Visible Church, and receive a new and spiritual birth—And the blood of Christ, which is represented in the Eucharist, and shows forth the sacrifice of his humanity, by which the new and eternal life is obtained—And these three are constantly witnessing on earth the efficacy of Christ's death, his humanity and deity—If the testimony of human evidence is received (Deut. xvii. 6.), the testimony of God is greater; for he who has faith in God shall have the witness of the Spirit within himself, regenerating his whole nature—but he who believeth not maketh him a liar; refusing to believe the testimony God has given in his prophecies, and wonderful interpositions, to attest the divinity of Christ—The testimony witnessed by the Three in heaven, and the three on earth is, that God will give to man eternal life through his Son—He that conforms himself to the image of Christ, making a sacrifice of flesh (blood), hath the heavenly life begun in him; and he that does not conform himself to his image, has no reason to expect the eternal life obtained through Christ.

¹ WHOSOEVER ^abelieveth, that ^bJesus is the Christ, is ^cborn of God; ^dand every one that loveth Him that begat, loveth him also that is begotten of Him. ² By this we know that we love the children of God, when we love God, and keep his commandments. ³ For ^ethis is the love of God, that we keep his commandments; and his ^fcommandments are not grievous. ⁴ For ^gwhatsoever is born of God overcometh the world; and this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith. ⁵ Who is he that overcometh the world, but ^hhe that believeth that Jesus is ⁱthe Son of God? ⁶ This is he that came ^jby water and blood, even Jesus Christ, (not by water only, but by water and blood;) ^kand it is the Spirit that beareth witness, because the Spirit is Truth. ⁷ For there are three that bear record [in heaven, the Father, ^lthe Word, and the Holy Ghost: ^mand these three are One. ⁸ And there are three that bear witness in earth], the Spirit, and the water, and the blood: and these three agree in one. ⁹ If we receive ⁿthe witness of men, the witness of God is greater: ^ofor this is the witness of God, which He hath testified of ^phis Son. ¹⁰ He that believeth on ^qthe Son of God ^rhath the witness in himself; he that believeth not God ^shath made him a liar, because he believeth not the record that God gave of ^this Son. ¹¹ And ^uthis is the record—That God hath given to us eternal life, and ^vthis life is in ^whis Son. ¹² He ^xthat hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not ^ythe Son of God hath not life.

St. John writes these things to them, that they may ascertain whether they have the witness of the Spirit within themselves by the regeneration it produces, and that they may continue in the faith of the Son of God—And this is the great privilege of their faith; that, if they pray for any thing which is consistent with the revealed will of God, God will hear them, and grant their petitions—If any man see his brother afflicted for a sin of infirmity or ignorance, he shall pray to God for his pardon and restoration—But there is a sin unto death—the sin of apostacy from Christianity, or a total and wilful rejection of it, which it is useless to pray for; for such offenders renounce the only condition of salvation—Every unrighteous action is sin, being a violation of the Law of God, and merits temporal death—but those sins which are not presumptuous and wilful should be interceded for, and, on repentance, a pardon may be hoped for—Those who are regenerated by the Holy Spirit do not continue in sin, being preserved by divine grace from the assaults of the Devil, so that they are not enslaved by him—Christians are assured by the influences of the Spirit that they are born of God; but the world (unregenerate and wicked men) are still lying wounded and slain under the dominion of the Wicked One—But Christians know that the Son of God came in the flesh, and hath given them a spiritual understanding, that they may have the knowledge of the true God, and be united to him through Jesus Christ, who partakes of the proper Deity of his Father, and to those who are united to him through his Spirit he imparts eternal life—On this account he exhorts them, as beloved children, to keep themselves from apostacy, or any false worship, and from every thing that would alienate their affections and worship from the True God, who can preserve them to eternal life.

- a* The alteration of this verse is made in conformity with Dr. Knapp's text; the common version reads thus: These things have I written unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God; that ye may know that ye have eternal life, and that ye may believe on the name of the Son of God.—ED.

b See Mark 1. 1.

¹³ THESE ^athings have I written unto you, ^bthat ye may know, that ye that believe on the Name of ^cthe Son of God have eternal life.

¹⁴ And this is the confidence that we have ^{*}in Him, that, ^dif we ask any thing according to his will, he heareth us; ¹⁵ and if we know that He hear us, whatsoever we ask, we know that we have the petitions that we desired of Him.

¹⁸ We know that ⁱwhosoever is born of God sinneth not; but he that is begotten of God ^jkeepeth himself, and that Wicked One toucheth him not. ¹⁹ And we know that we are of God, and ^kthe whole world lieth in wickedness. ²⁰ And we know that ^lthe Son of God is come, and ^mhath given us an understanding, ⁿthat we may know Him that is true, and we are in Him that is true, even in his Son Jesus Christ. ^oThis is the true God, ^pand eternal life. ²¹ Little children, ^qkeep yourselves from idols. [Amen.]

[END OF THE FIRST EPISTLE OF JOHN.]

THE SECOND EPISTLE OF JOHN.

St. John writes this Epistle to caution a Christian Mother and her Children against the Seductions and pernicious Errors of the false Teachers, supposed to be a Sect of the Gnostics.^p

§ 13.—verse 1-3.

The Salutation.

¹ THE ELDER unto the Elect Lady and her children, ^awhom I love in the truth, (and not I only, but also all they that have known ^bthe truth;) ² for the truth's sake, which dwelleth in us, and shall be with us for ever. ³ Grace ^cbe with you, mercy, and peace, from God the Father and from the Lord Jesus Christ the Son of the Father, ^din truth and love!

The Apostle mentions his joy at finding some of her children conducting themselves according to the pure doctrines of the Gospel—He exhorts her to Christian love, not as in obedience to a command never before delivered, but to a command which was given from the very beginning, and which the Apostles constantly preached—The great proof of love to God is obedience and conformity to his commands; and this is the great commandment, that they should believe in Him whom God hath sent (John vi. 29.)—These doctrines were preached to them from the beginning, that they might have proper motives and principles for their love and obedience—It is now particularly necessary to remind them of these, because many deceivers are gone out into the world, who deny that Jesus Christ had come in the flesh, regarding his death and suffering as appearances, and not as realities—every teacher who teaches such doctrines is the False Prophet, and the Antichrist, foretold by Jesus Christ (1 John ii. 18.)—He therefore beseeches the Elect Lady and her children not to be deceived by them—Whoever transgresses by teaching other doctrines than those taught by Christ and his Apostles, hath no communion with God as their Father—But he that continues in these doctrines, hath communion with God as his Father, and the Son of God as his Saviour—Any teacher who holds not the doctrine, that Christ came and suffered in the flesh for man, is not to be received into the house, nor salutations of good success offered to him—For he that treats such as a Christian brother, by giving him protection and encouragement, accredits his ministry, and becomes a partaker of the mischief he may commit.

⁴ I REJOICED greatly that I found of thy children ^ewalking in truth, as we have received a commandment from the Father. ⁵ And now I beseech thee, Lady, ^fnot as though I wrote a new commandment unto thee, but that which we had from the beginning, ^gThat we love one another. ⁶ And ^hthis is love, that we walk after his commandments.

THE THIRD EPISTLE OF JOHN.

*St. John writes this Epistle^a to Gaius, to praise him for his steadfast Faith and Kindness to some Christian Brethren and Strangers, and to recommend them again to his Protection and Benevolence—to rebuke and to caution him against the presumptuous Arrogance of Diotrephes, who had denied his Authority, and disobeyed his Injunctions, and to recommend Demetrius to his Attention, and the Imitation of

§ 15.—verse 1, to the end.

The aged Apostle to Gaius, the beloved of all who knew him, who is beloved also of the Apostle, according to the truth—He prays that his temporal prosperity and health may be in proportion to his virtues and spiritual attainments, that he may long live a blessing to the Church—His great joy when he was informed of his continuing in the true doctrines of the Gospel—He has acted towards the brethren and strangers agreeably to the true faith; and they have borne testimony before the church to his Christian love and benevolence, whom he will do well to assist a second time in a manner worthy of God, from the divine principle of love which his Spirit imparts—For it was for the sake of Christ, and preaching his Gospel to the Gentiles, that the brethren went out, receiving nothing for their labors, that they might not have their success diminished by a suspicion of mercenary motives—Those who remain at home should entertain and receive into their houses the laborers who leave their homes, and make distant journeys for the sake of the Gospel, that by contributions they may assist and encourage them, and so become joint laborers with them—He had written a letter to this effect to the Church of which Gaius was a member; but Diotrephes, who had assumed an arrogant preëminence, denied his apostolical authority, and probably suppressed the letter—The Apostle threatens to punish him signally for his deeds, as they impeded and injured the cause of truth and Christianity—He calumniated the apostles—refused to obey their injunctions—and cast out of the Church those who did so, relieving the necessities of the brethren—He exhorts them not to follow the example of Diotrephes, but to imitate that which is good, knowing that such are begotten of God—He recommends the example of Demetrius, who, on the contrary, is praised by all men for his Christian graces and virtues, by the Gospel itself, and by the Apostle, whose testimony they are assured is true and impartial—He excuses himself for not writing more fully on these matters, but intends soon to see Gaius—His benediction and salutation.

thou doest to the brethren, and to strangers, ⁶ which have borne witness of thy charity before the Church; whom if thou bring forward on their journey [†]after a godly sort, thou shalt do well. ⁷ Because that for his Name's sake they went forth, [‡]taking nothing of the Gentiles. ^d We therefore ought to receive such, that we might be fellow-helpers to the truth. ^{15.}

⁹ I wrote unto the Church; but Diotrophes, who loveth to have the preëminence among them, receiveth us not. ¹⁰ Wherefore, if I come, I will remember his deeds which he doeth, prating against us with malicious words: and not content therewith, neither doth he himself receive the brethren, and forbiddeth them that would, and casteth them out of the Church. ¹¹ Beloved, ^e follow not that which is evil, but that which is good. ^f He that doeth good is of God; but he that doeth evil hath not seen God. ^g

END OF THE CANON OF THE NEW TESTAMENT.

SECTION XX.—St. John sanctions the Books of the New Testament, and completes the Canon of Scripture by writing his Gospel, at the request of the Church at Ephesus.

THE close of the apostolic age now drew near. The former Dispensation had been abrogated, and Jerusalem destroyed. The building up of the visible Church was consigned to another order of instructors, under the abiding and miraculous influence of the same Spirit. One thing alone was wanting to complete the sanctions of the Gospel of Christ, and to give permanence to the teaching of the apostles. The Jew was able to appeal with boldness to a collection of Inspired Writings, and it was necessary that the Christian should be able to appeal to the same authority. Another volume of Scripture was essential to the New Dispensation; originating in the same divine source, confirmed by similar evidence of prophecy, miracle, and purity of precept and doctrine. For this purpose the beloved disciple was preserved in life to a very late period, till the numbers of Christians had so increased, that the heathen temples, as Pliny affirmed, in his celebrated letter to Trajan, had begun to be deserted. For the instruction of these immense multitudes three Gospels, the Book of the Acts, and all the Epistles had been already written; and it is not improbable that a general expectation might have prevailed throughout the Churches, that the last of the Inspired Apostles would sanction with his approbation the books which had already been written—that he would approve or condemn the novel opinions which had begun to divide the infant, or the more established, societies—that he would relate, for the benefit and consolation of Christians, the more impressive conversations and dying instructions of our blessed Lord—and, finally, close the Canon of the New Testament, by his universally-acknowledged authority, before the age of miracle and inspiration had ceased. Whether it has ceased for ever on earth, or only till the millennial day of universal righteousness, is among the unrevealed mysteries of Christianity. The contents of St. John's Gospel, and the evidence of ecclesiastical history prove to us, that the greater part of these things have been done, and that the Canon of Scripture was now closed, till the end of the Christian dispensation.

The evidence, however, which still remains upon this subject will not appear to many persons altogether decisive. What that is I shall collect from Lampe.

As the canon of the Old Testament was completed by Simon the Just, the last of the great Sanhedrin, so is it probable the canon of the New Testament was completed either by St. John, or that disciple who might be the survivor of the one hundred and twenty, the number of the Sanhedrin, who met at the day of Pentecost. It is not probable that any of these outlived St. John, who died nearly seventy years after the ascension of his Divine Master.

I am of opinion that the canon of Scripture was completed before the persecution of Trajan, that the Christians under that terrible visitation, upon the cessation of the spirit of prophecy, which in all their distresses had been the evidence of their faith, and their unfailling consolation, might have the complete and perfect Scripture, to direct and comfort them. The Gospel of St. Matthew was written during the Pauline persecution—that of St. Mark in the Herodian—that of St. Luke about the time of the Neronian—and if the Gospel of St. John was written, and the canon of Scripture completed, in anticipation of the Trajanian persecution, the blood of the martyrs, in a new and more impressive sense, may be justly called the seed of the Church.

Eusebius is generally considered as affording decisive evidence that the canon of Scripture was completed by St. John. In the Third Book of his Ecclesiastical History, this historian gives an account of the bishops who presided over the Churches of Rome, Jerusalem, and Alexandria. From mentioning Ignatius, bishop of Antioch, and Simeon, bishop of Jerusalem, he proceeds to relate some traditional stories of St. John, who was the contemporary of both. He then goes on to mention the writings of the Apostle, and informs us that St. John wrote his Gospel to relate the circumstances which had been omitted by the other Evangelists, particularly those which occurred at the commencement of our Lord's ministry. The Apostle approved of all that had been said by the three Evangelists; he confirmed their declarations by his own testimony, and added his own Gospel to complete whatever in theirs might be deficient.

This testimony of Eusebius does not appear to Mosheim to be sufficient to convince us that St. John completed the canon of the New Testament. He certainly says nothing of the Acts or the Epistles: as these, however, were undoubtedly and unanimously received as Inspired Books by the great majority of Christians, and as the Acts were written by St. Luke, and formed as it were the second part of the Gospel; and the Epistles of St. Paul were so interwoven with the history of his travels, by St. Luke, that they could not be separated; it is difficult to believe that the Apostle should have sanctioned the Gospels alone, and not have confirmed also the authority of their inseparable and inspired appendages. It is true that Eusebius confines his testimony to the Gospels; but he does not do this in such a manner that we are necessarily led to suppose that he omitted to approve of the remainder of the Sacred Writings. The general and ancient tradition may supply the place of more demonstrative evidence with those who are contented with the authority of antiquity without decided evidence of another kind; provided there be nothing which is absurd in itself, inconsistent with Scripture, nor opposite to authentic evidence. It is not, however, improbable that those Epistles, which were not received by all Christians into the canon, immediately on their first publication, had been neglected by the Gentile Christians, because they were principally addressed to the converts from among the Jews, or to the Hebrews generally. Should this conjecture be well founded, they might not have been known to the Church at Ephesus at this time, and possibly, therefore, were not included in the collection of Inspired Writings which were submitted at Ephesus to St. John, and received the sanction of that apostle.

It has been supposed by many, that the New Testament contains internal evidence that the canon of Scripture was now fixed by St. John; or that the Gospels, the Acts, the Apocalypse, and the universally-received Epistles, were sanctioned by his authority. The passage (Apoc. xxii. 18, 19.) in which a blessing is pronounced upon all who hear the words of this book is said to refer not merely to the Apocalypse, but to the whole word of God; this opinion, however, does not seem to be supported by the context. Augustine (ap. Lampe) asserts that the canon of Scripture was confirmed, from the times of the apostles, by the episcopal successions and early Churches. Lampe quotes also Jerome and Tertullian, who do not, however, speak with decision. The prolonged life of the Apostle, after whom no inspired book could be expected by the Churches, his certain knowledge of the books which had already been so universally received, and the necessity of his approbation, or condemnation, combine to render him the one individual who was called upon to decide the authority of the books, and to complete the canon. Irenæus seems to allude to the completed canon, when, soon after the death of St. John, he says concerning Polycarp, "He always taught those things which he had learned from the apostles, which the Church had delivered, and which alone are true."

The last writer who has studied the subject, was the late lamented and learned Mr. Rennell, who has been so prematurely removed from the scene of his useful labors. In his observations on the compilation of the apocryphal writings of the apostolic age, published by Mr. Hone, he observes:—

"When was the canon of Scripture determined? It was determined immediately after the death of St. John, the last survivor of the apostolic order. The canon of the Gospels was determined indeed before his death; for we read in Eusebius, that he gave his sanction to the three other Gospels, and completed this part of the New Testament with his own. By the death of St. John the catalogue of Scripture was completed and closed. We have seen from the testimony both of themselves, and of their immediate successors, that the inspiration of writing was strictly confined to the apostles, and accordingly we find that no pretensions were ever made by any true Christian to a similar authority.

“By whom was the canon of Scripture determined? It was determined, not by the decision of any individual, nor by the decree of any council, but by the general consent of the whole and every part of the Christian Church. It is indeed a very remarkable circumstance, that among the various disputes which so early agitated the Church, the canon of Scripture was never the subject of controversy. If any question might be said to have arisen, it had reference to one or two of those books which are included in the present canon; but with respect to those which are out of the canon, no difference of opinion ever existed.

“The reason of this agreement is a very satisfactory one. Every one who is at all versed in ecclesiastical history is aware of the continual intercourse which took place in the apostolic age between the various branches of the Church Universal. This communication, as Mr. Nolan has well observed, arose out of the Jewish polity, under which the various synagogues of the Jews, which were dispersed throughout the Gentile world, were all subjected to the Sanhedrin at Jerusalem, and maintained a constant correspondence with it. Whenever then an Epistle arrived at any particular Church, it was first authenticated; it was then read to all the holy brethren, and was subsequently transmitted to some other neighbouring Church. Thus we find that the authentication of the Epistles of St. Paul was ‘the salutation with his own hand’ (2 Thess. iii. 17.), by which the Church, to which the letter was first addressed, might be assured that it was not a forgery. We find also a solemn adjuration of the same Apostle, that his Epistle ‘should be read to all the holy brethren’ (1 Thess. v. 27); and again, that his Epistles should be transmitted to other Christian communities. ‘When this Epistle is read among you, cause that it be read also in the Church of the Laodiceans, and that ye likewise read the Epistle from Laodicea’ (Col. iv. 16.) From this latter passage we infer, that the system of transmission was a very general one; as the Epistle, which St. Paul directs the Colossians to receive from the Laodiceans, was not originally addressed to the latter, but was sent to them from some other Church. To prevent any mistake or fraud, this transmission was made by the highest authority, namely, by that of the bishop. Through him official communications were sent from one Church to another, even in the remotest countries. Clement, the bishop of Rome, communicated with the Church at Corinth; Polycarp, the bishop of Smyrna, wrote an epistle to the Philippians; Ignatius, the bishop of Antioch, corresponded with the Churches of Rome, of Magnesia, of Ephesus, and others. These three bishops were the companions and immediate successors of the apostles, and followed the system of correspondence and intercourse which their masters had begun. Considering all these circumstances, we shall be convinced how utterly improbable it was, that any authentic work of an apostle should have existed in one Church, without having been communicated to another. It is a very mistaken notion of Dodwell, that the books of the New Testament lay concealed in the coffers of particular Churches, and were not known to the remainder of the world until the late days of Trajan. This might have been perfectly true with respect to the originals, which were doubtless guarded with peculiar care in the custody of the particular Churches to which they were respectively addressed. But copies of these originals, attested by authority of the bishop, were transmitted from one Church to another with the utmost freedom, and were thus rapidly dispersed throughout the whole Christian world. As a proof of this, St. Peter, in an epistle addressed generally to the Churches in Asia, speaks of ‘all the Epistles’ of St. Paul, as a body of Scripture universally circulated and known.

“The number of the apostles, including Paul and Barnabas, was but fourteen; to these, and to these alone, in the opinion of the early Church, was the inspiration of writing confined: out of these, six only deemed it necessary to write; what they did write was authenticated with the greatest caution, and circulated with the utmost rapidity; what was received in any Church as the writing of an apostle was publicly read; no Church was left to itself, or to its own direction; but was frequently visited by the apostles, and corresponded with by their successors; all the distant members of the Church universal, in the apostolic age, being united by frequent intercourse and communication, became one body in Christ. Taking all these things into our consideration, we shall see with what ease and rapidity the canon of Scripture would be formed, there being no room either for fraudulent fabrication on the one hand, or for arbitrary rejection on the other. The case was too clear to require any formal discussion, nor does it appear that there was any material forgery that could render it necessary. The writings of the apostles, and of the apostles alone, were received as the word of God, and were separated from all others, by that most decisive species of authority—the authority of a general, an immediate, and an undisputed consent.

“This will appear the more satisfactory to our minds, if we take an example from the age in which we live. The letters of Junius, for instance, were published at intervals within a certain period. Since the publication of the last authentic letter, many under that signature have appeared, purporting to have been written by the same author. But this circumstance throws no obscurity over the matter, nor is the canon of Junius, if I may transfer the term from sacred to secular writing, involved thereby in any difficulty or doubt. If it should be hereafter inquired at what time, or by what authority the authentic letters were separated from the spurious, the answer will be, that such a separation never took place; but that the canon of Junius was determined immediately after the date of the last letter. To us who live so near to the time of publication, the line of distinction between the genuine and the spurious is so strongly marked, and the evidence of authenticity on the one side, and of forgery on the other, is so clear and convincing, that a formal rejection of the latter is unnecessary. The case has long since been determined by the tacit consent of the whole British nation, and no man in his senses would attempt to dispute it.

“Yet how much stronger is the case of the scriptural canon. The author of Junius was known to none, he could not therefore of himself bear any testimony to the authenticity of his works; the authors of the New Testament were known to all, and were especially careful to mark, to authenticate, and to distinguish their writings. The author of Junius had no personal character which could stamp his writing with any high or special authority: whatever proceeded from the apostles of Christ was immediately regarded as the offspring of an exclusive inspiration. For the canon of Junius we have no external evidence, but that of a single publisher: for the canon of Scripture we have the testimony of Churches which were visited, bishops who were appointed, and converts innumerable, who were instructed by the apostles themselves. It was neither the duty nor the interest of any one, excepting the publisher, to preserve the volume of Junius from spurious additions; to guard the integrity of the Sacred Volume was the bounden duty of every Christian who believed that its words were the words of eternal life.

“If, then, notwithstanding these and other difficulties, which might be adduced, the canon of Junius is established beyond controversy or dispute, by the tacit consent of all who live in the age in which it is written; there can be no reason why the canon of Scripture, under circumstances infinitely stronger, should not have been determined in a manner precisely the same; especially when we remember, that in both cases the forgeries made their appearance subsequently to the determination of the canon. There is not a single book in the spurious department of the apocryphal volume which was even known where the canon of Scripture was determined. This is a fact which considerably strengthens the case. There was no difficulty or dispute in framing the canon of Scripture, because there were no competitors, whose claims it was expedient to examine, no forgeries whose impostures it was necessary to detect. The first age of the Church was an age of too much vigilance, of too much communication, of too much authority, for any fabricator of Scripture to hope for success. If any attempt was made, it was instantly crushed. When the authority of the apostles and of the apostolic men had lost its immediate influence, and heresies and disputes had arisen, then it was that forgeries began to appear. But by this time the canon of Scripture had taken such firm root in the minds of men, that it resisted every effort to supplant it. Nothing, indeed, but the general and long-determined consent of the whole Christian world could have preserved the Sacred Volume in its integrity, unimpaired by the mutilation of one set of heretics, and unencumbered by the forgeries of another.”

The time of St. John's death is very uncertain. Jerome (in Covin. lib. i. c. 14.) affirms, that he died worn out with age. Irenæus (l. ii. c. 39. l. iii. c. 3.) tells us, that he survived to the reign of Trajan. Usher and Beveridge (de Martyr. Ignat. p. 177, in Canon Apost. 1455) refer his death to the second year of Trajan. Eusebius, with a great number of the fathers, Jerome, Tertullian, Origen, and others, place it in the third. The Paschal Chronicle assigns it to the seventh year of that emperor. He died at Ephesus, in expectation, says the Arabian author, of his blessedness: by which expression we may infer, that he met the last enemy of man with that serene and peaceful and well-founded hope, which is the best assurance of the happy immortality of every privileged Christian.

It is needless to repeat the eulogies with which affection and admiration have united to commemorate the death of this amiable Apostle. The Protestant theologian will require more authentic evidence than the reporters of the wonderful tales, to which I allude, can produce, before he can credit that St. John never died, that he only lay sleeping in his grave, as appeared from the boiling or bubbling up of the dust, which was moved by his breath; and many other gravely related histories, which excite but our smiles. His body is buried in peace, but his name liveth for evermore. So long as the present Dispensation shall continue, and the Christian Church be commanded to pursue its painful way through the wilderness of this world, to that land of peace and rest, where the spirits of the prophets and apostles await their companions and followers from among mankind; so long as a blasphemer against the Divinity of the Son of God shall laugh to scorn our prayers to a crucified Redeemer; so long shall the inspired pages of this beloved disciple erect in our hearts the best monument to his memory^a.

SECTION XXI.—Brief View of the Condition of the Jews, the Stations of the Sanhedrin, and its Labors, before the final and total Dispersion of their Nation; with an Outline of the History of the Visible Church from the closing of the Canon of Scripture, to the present Day; and the Prospects of the permanent Happiness of Mankind, in the present and future World.

THE first century of the Christian æra is the most eventful in the annals of the human race.

The institutions of Christianity had succeeded to the institutions of the Law of Moses. The temple of God upon earth, which had opened its gates to the people of one favored country alone, was taken down, and the whole world was invited, by the preachers of the holy Gospel, to enter into another temple of God upon earth, whose gates stood open night and day, to receive all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues.

It may be useful, in the conclusion of this work, to cast a rapid glance over the past history of that religion, which Christ and his apostles, and their successors in the Christian ministry, have established. From this we shall be naturally led to consider the state of Christianity in our own age, not merely in England, or in Europe, but through the world. The appearances of the present times, the expectations of wise and good men, and the express predictions both of the old prophets and of the Christian Scriptures, will justify us in anticipating the eventual comparative perfection of mankind, and the universal establishment of the one pure religion in this world, before the arrival of that solemn day, when the theatre on which the great drama of man has been acted will be swept away from existence.

We will compare the state of the world at the beginning of the century before the birth of Christ was announced to the shepherds, with its condition at the death of the last of the apostles.

At the commencement of the century in which the Redeemer of mankind became incarnate, the world was divided into two classes, the Pagans and the Jews. The former of these had entirely forgotten the object for which mankind had been originally created; and, among the latter, the remembrance of that object was confined to a very few who still retained the spiritual meaning of their Scriptures, and anticipated a Deliverer from the dominion of ignorance and wickedness, rather than a Saviour from the Roman yoke. The degeneracy of mankind was daily increasing; and the Church of God, that is, that portion of the visible Church which had preserved itself pure from the universal corruption, was so rapidly diminishing, that there was danger lest the world should return to the same condition to which it had been reduced, when eight persons only were saved from the deluge, or when ten worshippers of Jehovah could not be found to preserve the cities of the plain. Among the heathen all classes had become foolish. The magistrates and the statesmen of antiquity considered religion as a useful engine of state; the philosophers, bewildered among their metaphysical dreams, and involved in endless disputations and divisions, considered all religions as equally false, and equally true; justly despising the inconsistencies of the popular mythology, they knew not where to rest. The scanty remains of the ancient truth, which tradition still preserved among them, was obscured by innumerable absurdities. Neither the hope of good, nor the fear of evil, animated the popular devotion; while the very superstitions, which the wandering reason of their pretended philosophy despised, were rendered more binding upon the ignorant populace, by the outward compliance of the philosophers with all its rites and ceremonies.

The teachers of the Jews had secularized the religion of their fathers. The magnificent promises and splendid predictions of the prophets, which describe the spiritual glories of the expected Messiah, were interpreted of a temporal dominion. The maintainers of the spiritual interpretation were treated with contempt. The two classes of teachers, who divided the affections of the people, united in ridiculing the holiness of heart and life required by the Law of Jehovah. The Sadducees denied the doctrine of a future state, and the consequent sanctions of an invisible world; the Pharisees resolved the religion of Moses and of the prophets into the belief of traditions, and attachment of external observances, and ostentatious austerities. The one destroyed internal religion, by denying its necessity altogether; the latter ruined its influence with equal efficacy, by finding a substitute for holiness. The first were condemned entirely, as the open enemies of purity, as the infidels of their day; the last were condemned with unsparing severity, but not so universally, or totally, in that more restricted censure, "these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone." The consequence of the united dereliction of both Jews and heathens was, that the knowledge and fear of God was rapidly fading away from the public faith and the private motives of mankind.

The theological student, who is desirous of pursuing this subject, is referred to Dr. Cozins' work on the Canon of Scripture; a very useful publication, which was written while the learned author was expelled from his living by the parliament; to Jones On the Canon; Lardner's Supplement to the Credibility; Horne's Crit. Introduction; and to the prefaces of commentators in general.

The close of the century presented a strong contrast with this melancholy condition. Mankind were now divided into three classes. The heathens, who, in addition to their former errors, had now acquired a spirit of persecution; the Jews, who, though they had been conquered by the Romans, and subjected to severe persecutions, still continued in various towns in Palestine, and throughout the empire, and whose inveterate hatred against the Christians increased daily; the third division, and it included no small portion of mankind, were the Christians, who were elected by the providence of God from both the former classes.

Before we proceed to the history of the Christian Church, it may be advisable to inquire into the condition of the once-favored people of God, after their rejection of the Messiah had brought upon them the accomplishment of his predictions, in the destruction of the city, and the utter ruin of their political existence.

The visible true Church, in any nation, is under the protection of the peculiar providence of God, and entitled to the veneration of the people, whom it is intended to guide to future happiness so long only as it retains its spiritual fitness, and zeal, and purity, to accomplish the objects of its institution. This seems to be the lesson which the fall of Jerusalem was designed to impress upon the infant Church, which had now succeeded to the miraculous gifts and privileges of the Church of Jerusalem. Not only did the fallen daughter of Sion render service to her favored sister, by impressing this solemn lesson; but she was still permitted, before the final dispersion of her sons, so to deliver the ancient Scriptures to the Gentile Churches, that their integrity and genuineness should be unimpeachable, either by the Jews or heathens.

Though the city and temple of Jerusalem were destroyed, the Sanhedrin remained, and were acknowledged by the surviving Hebrews as the legitimate directors and teachers of the people. Some years before the destruction of the temple they had removed to Jabneh; and, after that event, Rabban Jochanan ben Zacchai, the president, who had predicted the destruction of the temple forty years before, when the doors of the temple had opened without visible cause, requested permission of Titus, with whom he was in favor, to reëstablish the Sanhedrin at Jabneh. Fully convinced of the truth of his own prophecy, he had entreated the people to submit to the Romans. It was possibly on this account that Titus complied with his request. He sat as president of the Sanhedrin five years after the destruction of the city. Some few of the more eminent and learned Jews, who escaped from the common slaughter, from the sale and vassalage of their countrymen, continued with him at Jabneh. Among these were R. Gamaliel, the son of the R. Simeon who was educated with St. Paul, and was killed when president of the Sanhedrin, at the siege of Jerusalem; this Simeon is considered by the Jews as the last of the ten eminent men who were slain by the kingdom, that is, who were put to death by the Romans. With R. Gamaliel were R. Zadok, who had emaciated his body with extreme fasting, when the doors of the temple moved on their hinges by invisible hands, R. Eliezer ben Hyrcanus, the author of Pirke Eliezer, and others whose names are still held in honor among the Jews. These men were employed to the last in making decrees respecting the ritual of the temple service, and settling questions of ceremonies; though the glory had departed, and religion had become an empty form. "There were thirteen worshipings, or bowings, in the temple, but the house of Rabban Gamaliel and the house of Ananias Sagan made fourteen," says a Jewish tradition. Lightfoot erroneously conjectures, that the Ananias, who was thus united with the house of R. Gamaliel in ordering the additional bowings in the temple, when it was about to be destroyed, was the same Ananias who insulted St. Paul.

R. Jochanan was succeeded in his presidency over the Sanhedrin at Jabneh by R. Gamaliel. The traditions relate, that he gave offence to the people by his pride and passion, and at one period was deprived of his presidency; he was restored to his dignity in part only, R. Eliezer being elevated to the joint administration.

The presidency of these two continued twelve years; from the second year of Vespasian, to the second of Domitian. The hatred of the Romans towards the Jews had not at this time increased to its height. In the second year of Domitian, R. Akibah was their head. His presidency lasted forty years, when the Romans sacked with so much cruelty the town Bitter, or, more properly, Beth-Tar. The Jews now began to be more severely threatened, as enemies to the public peace of the empire, and to all mankind. This was the period of the dreadful insurrection at Cyrene, when they murdered two hundred and twenty thousand Greeks and Romans, under circumstances of the most revolting and shameful cruelty. A similar insurrection was made in Egypt and Cyprus, where they slaughtered two hundred and forty thousand. The principal author of this revolt is said to have been the false Messiah, Ben Cozba, who proclaimed himself king, and coined money. This took place in the reign of Adrian, and R. Akibah, the president of the Sanhedrin, was killed at Beth-Tar, as armorbearer to this pretended Messiah.

The destruction of the remaining cities of Judæa, and the number of Jews who were slaughtered make the Jews consider this period as the completion of their ruin, and the most severe blow they ever received, except the destruction of their city. Adrian had sent against them the relentless Severus, who was afterwards emperor.

At this time lived Trypho, the Jew who had the controversy with Justin Martyr. It is not improbable that this was the same as Tarphon, an intimate associate of R. Akibah; he is frequently mentioned in the talmuds.

The fourth president of the Sanhedrin, after the destruction of Jerusalem, was Rabban Simeon. He governed about thirty years, from the sixth or eighth of Adrian, to the fifteenth or sixteenth of Antoninus Pius. The honor and power of the learned Jews began now to lessen daily, though there were still found among them some eminent names which are yet honored both among the Jews and Christians. The principal of these were R. Simeon ben Jochai, and Eliezer, his son, the first authors of the book Zohar; and Aquila, the celebrated proselyte, whose translation of the Scriptures is quoted even by the Jerusalem Gemarists. The Sanhedrin had now removed from Jabneh to Usha Shepharaim.

R. Simeon was succeeded by his son, R. Judah the Holy. He was held in very high estimation among his countrymen, and is said to have been much valued by one of the Antonines. It was R. Judah who caused the Traditional Law to be collected into one mass. This is called the Mishna, and is the great code by which the Jews still profess to be regulated. The number of pupils who might be the preservers of this code of traditionary law was daily diminishing, and he resolved therefore to commit it to writing, that it might be preserved. He appointed teachers of these traditions also in all the cities remaining to the Jewish name. The Sanhedrin, in his reign, removed to Bethshaarain, Tsipporis, and Tiberias. R. Judah compiled the Mishna, as some traditions relate, in the year 190, in the latter end of the reign of Commodus; or, as others affirm, in the year 220, one hundred and fifty years after the destruction of the city.

R. Judah was succeeded by his son R. Chaninah, in whose presidency we first read of the Commentaries on the Mishna, which are called the Gemara. The Mishna, which is the Text of the Traditional Law, and the Gemara, which is the Comment, make up together the Talmud. The Targums are commentaries on Scripture.

R. Chaninah was succeeded by R. Jochanan, who was president of the Sanhedrin at Tiberias eighty years. Though the country abounded with schools, and the surviving Jews made every effort in their power to perpetuate their now corrupt religion, no school or college obtained so much celebrity as that at Tiberias. Jerome was instructed by a learned man of Tiberias; and it was most probably about this time, that that edition of the Hebrew Bible was prepared, which has ever been of high authority among both Jews and Christians; the edition of the Masorets, or, as they are now more generally called, the Masorites.

The term Masoret is derived from a Hebrew word, signifying tradition. The Masorites were the learned Jews of Tiberias, who, being anxious before their nation was finally separated, to secure the Sacred Text from corruption, prepared an edition of the Old Testament, in which they marked, by certain arbitrary vowel points, accents, and pauses, the traditionary pronunciation of every word. The Bibles which the Jews read in their synagogues are now, and it is believed have always been, written without the vowel points; but the minister is required to read each chapter according to the traditionary sounds of the words, which are preserved in the pointed Bibles; and an inspector or superintendent stands by him when he reads, to correct any error. This pronunciation is not borrowed from the Masoretic Bibles, as I have been informed by some learned Jews, whom I consulted on this matter; but it is the traditionary mode of reading which has been handed down from remote antiquity. Should this statement be correct, it appears to afford one very satisfactory argument, that the Masoretic punctuation is entitled to more respect than many modern Hebraists entertain for it. This, however, is not the place to enter upon this discussion. The Masorets, by their great care and diligence, have left us an edition of the Old Testament, which secures the text from all interpolations, while it checks also the licentiousness of conjectural criticism, and gives a definite meaning to many obscure passages; at the same time it by no means precludes the labors of the learned from aiming at greater accuracy in their attempts to understand Scripture, as the sense which the Masorets may have put upon any passage, can only be said to be highly probable: the meaning of Scripture in all cases being derivable from the words, and not from the vowel points, or any arbitrary divisions. "It is probable," says Bishop Marsh, "that the Masoretic text was formed from a collation of manuscripts; if so, it is still more valuable. The Masorets, as is well known, have counted every word and letter, that no changes may be made: and if the copies of the Old Testament, which Christians possess, and from which, with the apostles themselves, they derive irrefragable arguments for the Messiahship of Jesus of Nazareth, be impugned by the Jews, they may refer to the Masoretic edition, and urge the same arguments from that copy of the Scriptures upon which the Jews place the highest value."

The precise time when the Masorets of Tiberias completed this useful labor is not known. The providence of God preserved the appearance of a government among the Jews till this great work was completed, and the purity of the Inspired Volume secured from all possibility of corruption. They were then permitted to undergo the whole of the terrible punishments predicted by Moses and their prophets. So long as they had a president and a Sanhedrin in the Holy Land, they had a common country, though they had ceased to have a sacrifice, a temple, a prophet, or a king. Many of their learned men went to Babylon, the schools of which place had begun to be more celebrated than those of Judæa. To detail the further history of the cruelties they have practised, and the persecutions they have endured; the history of their patience, their sufferings; their depressed poverty; their industrious accumulation of wealth; their cultivation of the art of medicine; their fortunes in every country in the world; the deadly hatred, and fierce and bitter scorn to which they were condemned for many centuries; the account also of their rapidly increasing influence in the present state of society, when a supply of money from a few wealthy individuals, or even from one, in many instances may decide the destiny, religion, and liberty of kings and people; to detail all these wonderful incidents in the history of these miraculously-preserved people would lead me far beyond my present purpose. It is sufficient only to say, that their preservation has been effected by means so totally contrary to the general laws of society; by which, both in adversity and prosperity, nations, when settled among each other, uniformly amalgamate into one people; that, if we had no Scripture to guide us, we might justly infer they were preserved by the providence of God for some extraordinary destiny. What this destiny will be, we are told by the pages of Revelation: "They shall be gathered out of all people, and by an exodus from all countries more wonderful than that of their fathers from Egypt, they shall go up to their own country; and planting the vine and the olive on the hills and in the valleys of their fathers, they shall, after much tribulation, rejoice in the dominion of their Messiah, the manifested God of their fathers, the crucified Jesus of the Christians."

We will now return to the history of the Christian Church. Though the view which may be now taken of the effects of Christianity on human happiness is unavoidably brief and imperfect, the memory will be assisted by a regular division of the subject:—

I. The first stage is the State of the Christian Church from the Death of St. John to the Establishment of the persecuted Faith by Constantine.

II. From thence to the Rise of the Papal Power.

III. The Progress and Triumph of the Church of Rome.

I. The State of the Christian Church from the Death of St. John to the Death of Constantine.

In closing the volumes which it was necessary to peruse, for the drawing up of the following brief abstract of Ecclesiastical History, it was impossible to avoid contrasting the hatred and dissensions which have prevailed within the later centuries among Christians with the union and harmony which excited the surprise of their enemies, in the earlier ages of their faith. Although this difference can only be imputed to the infirmities, errors, or vices, which have debased and corrupted the Churches and their members, the faults of individuals have too frequently been referred to the religion they profess. It may be necessary, therefore, to define the meaning of Christianity, that by constantly keeping before us one certain definite view of the religion which was now established, we may not confound with it any one of the more or less extensive sects, or sectings, churches, or parties, which have endeavoured to identify their peculiar causes with that of Christianity, and their several titles with the exclusive name of Christian.

Christianity is the completed revelation of those sanctions of, and motives to virtue, which the unassisted reason of man could not have discovered. Its object is to promote the present and future happiness of the human race, which can only be effectually secured by virtuous principles and habits. One system of religion is distinguished from another by the opinions it teaches, the conduct it enforces, the institutions it establishes, and the means which it adopts for its preservation. The fundamental opinions, or essential doctrines of Christianity, may be included in these three—that the nature of man is now different from that with which his first parents were created—that a Divine Being undertook to recover mankind from this state of degradation, by offering himself as an atonement, after a life of blamelessness and purity, and by rising from the dead, to demonstrate the certainty of our own resurrection, and that divine assistance is afforded to all those who desire to be restored to that condition in which man was originally created.

The conduct which Christianity requires, does not extend to outward morality only, but to internal purity of motive,⁶ to spirituality of disposition, and, as far as possible, to a change of nature.
